AS soon as you begin to use California Citrus Cream your mirror will reflect a skin attractively clean.

And after awhile you will enjoy the satisfaction of having a skin that is naturally beautiful.

California Citrus Cream is made entirely of lemon. It contains a vegetable albuminoid, similar to the white of egg and lemon juice—absorbent, cleansing and astringent.

It washes off with water—removing soap, grease and all foreign matter from the pores.

The attractive box of four tubes is an ideal Xmas gift.

At the better shops and toilet counters, or mailed on receipt of price; twenty-five cents the tube or eighty-five cents the box of four.

THE distinctive character of Armor Bronze products, the great variety of objects, their tested durability and their intrinsic artistry makes your Christmas Shopping easy if you go to a store that features them. Gifts of Armor Bronze are appropriate and always welcome.

This year, to the more familiar Verde (Green) and Statuary (Brown) Bronze and Old Gold finishes of

ARMOR BRONZE

cast over an everlasting core* has been added the Polychrome. In this we merely do what the ancient Egyptians and Chinese did in the way they did it.

It is a process that produces a finish of permanent colors, rich, soft in tone and harmonious in combination. With many of the articles thus finished Sgraffito work has also been used—itsself an ancient process, of etching by hand through the colors in a variety of delicate, tracery designs.

Our Magnificent Catalog will be sent on request and describes a variety of Book Ends, Trays, Table and Floor Lamps, Lighting Fixtures, Door Stops, and Art Objects.

Armor Bronze products may be obtained at any of the following stores. If your town is not represented, you may order from us direct

Give him a Kerr Buckle and Belt—notice how quickly he puts it on—that he keeps it on and wears it every day. And well he might for such a gift is a tribute to his character.

The designs of the sterling silver or solid 14-kt. gold buckles, their curved shape, their bull-dog grip, the ease with which they are released; the quality of the straps; the kind of men who wear them—all are quite apart from the ordinary, and make Kerr Buckles and Belts a gift truly distinctive.

The high-class jeweler, accustomed to dealing in fine metals and precious stones, is the only person who can sell you a Kerr Buckle and Belt. Your jeweler can supply you with any design shown here. Should you order from him by mail, be sure to specify "Kerr," give buckle and strap number and waist measure.

In Sterling, $4.00 and up; in solid 14-kt. green or yellow gold, $25.00 and up.

FOUR CAKES

A SECOND

Each time the sand runs through the hourglass 14,400 cakes of PALMOLIVE are produced. Four cakes a second—240 cakes a minute—14,400 cakes an hour—for every working day.

—This is the enormous manufacturing volume required by the popularity of PALMOLIVE SOAP! For just as Palm and Olive oils were the indispensable cleansing agents and equipped the marble baths of ancient Egypt, Greece and Rome, so is the fragrant, wholesome cake of PALMOLIVE the indispensable equipment of the equally luxurious porcelain bath of the modern American home.

A luxury and a necessity combined; the modern perfection of a luxury ages old; this is the combination that requires four cakes a second to supply the millions that demand PALMOLIVE SOAP.

PALMOLIVE SHAMPOO—the olive oil shampoo—is as essential for proper care of the hair as is PALMOLIVE for the bath and toilet. You will find it wherever the PALMOLIVE line is sold, price 50 cents a bottle.

Our new PALMOLIVE booklet, describing the entire PALMOLIVE line, together with threefold sample package, will be mailed on receipt of 10 cents in stamps.

—it laughs at

Let the cold wind blow—the dust fly—the rain pour—the blizzard do its worst.

This is a Closed Car—a snug weather-tight Sedan as luxurious as one could wish in appearance and in interior furnishings and finish.

Yet when nature smiles this same car is a Touring Car—you may have the sides entirely open in a jiffy.

All of which makes it possible for one car to serve your every purpose adequately and smartly, regardless of season or even of sudden weather changes.

And there's nothing to mar your delight at being able to shut yourself up in this car—its motor and gears are so quiet that they are scarcely audible.

Silence is golden in any car—it is a delight of priceless worth in an enclosed car.

Everyone knows that nothing else has ever seriously challenged the Knight Type, Sleeve-valve motor in its noiselessness.

And to match its almost silent motor the Willys-Knight has quiet spiral bevel drive gears.

changing seasons

This quietness of the Willys-Knight Motor becomes almost dead silence as the miles pile up. This is the only type of motor known that does its best work in its old age after putting all rivals to rout in its youth.

It combines a softer "purr" and a more powerful "punch" than any other type of motor.

Its velvet smoothness puts all other motors to shame.

It loves carbon and it hates the repair shop.

It is the envy of all and but few are licensed to produce it. Those who own Knight Motored Cars, and they are legion, marvel that men can content themselves with other kinds.

A car and a motor for which we can make such sweeping unqualified claims must perform superbly.

It will. Have your demonstration, then place your order for the Willys-Knight Touring Sedan and be happily, properly equipaged for any occasion or weather condition.

SALES AND EXCHANGES

When you wish to sell something which you do not need—or to buy something which you do need—send your message to Sales and Exchanges. The price is $2 for 25 words, or less. Additional words, 10 cents each. Check or money order must accompany message; be sure to write your name and address very plain.

Your message for the January 15th, 1917, Vogue should be received on or before December 10th. Address all communications to Sales and Exchange Service, Vogue, 443 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

To Answer These Messages

1. Reply in a stamped envelope, unsealed, and with the number of the message in a corner. (For instance, 250-A.) Enclose this in an outer envelope and mail it to Vogue. Do not telephone—all communications must be through the mails. Post-cards not accepted.
2. Send Vogue no money—wait until the other woman writes to you.
3. If her letter is satisfactory, then send Vogue your money order or certified check for the amount agreed upon. We will have the article sent to you, and will keep your money on deposit until you instruct us to send it.
4. Never send any article to Vogue. The advertiser pays the expressage on articles sent for inspection—the one inspecting pays the return expressage if the article does not suit.

A Fair Exchange of Luxury

IT may be a seat at the opera—a new vanity case—a set of books—that you really want very badly indeed; yet your conscience tells you that it is unnecessary and must be listed under the heading of pure extravagance.

But what of the extravagances on hand—extravagances which you have committed, or that friends have committed for you?—extravagances in the shape of gifts that cannot be used—scores of little bits of luxury, once so fascinating and so welcome, but now unwanted?

Vogue will dispose of these for you. It will enable you to gratify the great desire—whether for opera, books or vanity case—with bank account unaltered and conscience unruffled.

THE INSTRUMENT OF QUALITY

Sonora

CLEAR AS A BELL

The Ideal Realized

A TONE as crystal clear as the chimes of a country church on a quiet Sunday; an accurate tone, repeating with science's precision the exact wave lengths of voice or instrument; a powerful tone, retaining all the resonant strength of the greatest bass, tenor or baritone; a gay and lively tone, teasing even reluctant feet to dance; a glorious tone, sparkling gem-like with the brilliance of the coloratura soprano; a magnificent tone, expressing the feeling of undying classic music—this is Sonora's tone which, at the Panama Pacific Exposition, in competition with the world, was awarded the highest score for tone quality by a jury of expert musicians. This conclusively proves Sonora's leadership as

The Highest Class Talking Machine in the World—the Instrument You Want for Your Own. To Possess a Sonora is an Envious Distinction.

MAKE CHRISTMAS SHOPPING A PLEASURE

WHAT an effort Christmas shopping is for the average shopper! Father wants anything except neckties, cigars, toilet articles, travelling accessories, books, pictures and a desk set. Mildred has everything that mortal could wish for, and her recollection of what she does not want measures up in volume with a Montgomery-Ward catalogue. Aunt Jane, dear soul, longs for a gift with a personal note—nothing expensive, mind you—just a little remembrance that costs a week, a taxicab, two chillblains and five dollars!

But the scientific shopper knows that by using Vogue, Christmas shopping can be accomplished quickly, correctly and pleasurably. She lets Vogue suggest appropriate gifts, and she lets Vogue tell her exactly where each gift may be bought. Thus she obviates days of racking speculation and weary tramping.

If Christmas shopping has been a bugbear to you in the past—try the Vogue way. Study these columns before you set your foot outside the door.

Note: The names and addresses of the shops selling the special articles pictured on these pages will be gladly furnished you on request; or, if you prefer, the Vogue Shopping Service will buy any of these articles for you on receipt of your check and instructions. Each inquiry or order should contain a stamped and addressed envelope.

Beaverbilt Christmas Suggestions

Here's an opportunity extended to Vogue readers only, to surprise their friends with Christmas gifts of a new and unusual character.

We show on this page seven Beaverbilt utilities of exclusive design and treatment. As we are only prepared to furnish a comparatively small number of each between now and Christmas-time, this offer is being advertised only in this single number of Vogue.

Beaverbilt means built by the Beaver Board Companies, originators of the famous pure-wood-fibre Beaver Board. No other material lends itself so splendidly to artistic decoration.

The highest degree of care has been exercised in the construction of these specialties. The decoration is of a character which will appeal to the most exacting tastes and such as is found only in the most exclusive shops. There is a pleasing appropriateness of design, whether expressed in the harmonious blending of warm colors or in daring contrasts. This unusual combination of true art value and genuine utility is the thing that makes the Beaverbilt specialty so distinctive a Christmas gift.

These black and white halftones cannot show you the beauty of Beaverbilt utilities but only convey an impression of their form and usefulness. As evidence of our complete confidence that they will please you, however, we offer these articles subject to our positive money-back guarantee expressed in the order blank coupon below.

Some personal words with S. Claus, Esq.

Old S. Claus was reminiscent. "I mind," said he, "when gew-gaws were standard gifts. Gold jewelry that turned green in the Spring, tra-la. Showy worth-naughts that died with the mistletoe. Jim-cracks that even the wastebasket blushed to receive."

Great sobs racked his Kris-kringlian frame. Mournfully he wrung three tears of assorted sizes from his beard. "In those days," he said, "Dec. 25 was Friendship's Funeral. . . ."

But presently a happy smile flickered through his snowy whiskers. He led me to his store-room. "Look," he chuckled. Over on one corner—but sh-h-h! Only sensible givers are allowed to read below of some of the things I saw that day.

"LIKLY" LUGGAGE

Asks no favors of the baggage man

IN a gown by Paquin or Premet the quality of the materials is taken for granted—your interest centers itself on the felicity of the design. The same holds true of the ROAMER—it is built to satisfy an ideal, not to meet a price; and while it has the mechanical genuineness of automobiles selling well above its price, its appearance is like no other car built in this country today.

The Roamer

America's Smartest Car

For the first time in the history of American automobile building it is now possible to secure a properly weighted motor car which has all the distinction of such foreign cars as a Rolls-Royce or Simplex, of a Fiat or Lancia, of an Isotta Fraschini or a De Dion Bouton. For the first time in the ROAMER, the choice of color of body, upholstery and top are made entirely a matter of your personal taste. And for the first time, the purchase price makes ownership plausible for most of us.

THE SPECIFICATIONS: Roamer-Rutenber high speed motor, six cylinders; Bosch high tension magneto; Roamer-Stromberg carbureter; Bijur starting and lighting; Borg & Beck clutch; Willard storage battery; Grant-Lees transmission; Roamer-Hess axles; Guernsey ball bearings (large size); Warner Autometer, Warner electric clock; Stewart-Warner warning signal; Houk wire wheels; hand buffed leather upholstery; Sulzberger highest grade hair in upholstering, with Marshall cushion springs; highest class domestic and imported motor cloth top materials; Boyce motometer; Good-year cord tires. The ROAMER has the completest equipment, including an extra wire wheel. It is priced at $1850.

A BOOK ABOUT THE ROAMER

We would thank you to send for a beautifully illustrated brochure which tells much more about the ROAMER than is possible here. An immediate request precludes any danger of forgetting to send for it.

The AEOLIAN-

THE NEW PHONOGRAPH

LIKE all other fine musical instruments, the Aeolian-Vocalion is a development—a product of a long series of refining processes.

Probably no one recognized earlier than the executives of our Research Department the certainty that the phonograph was to occupy an increasingly important place as a home musical instrument. They followed its progress from its incidence.

Long ago the study of this new marvel of science found a place in the Aeolian laboratories where the investigation of the phenomena of sound, as related to musical instrument making, is constantly carried forward. Thousands of experiments in phonograph construction were conducted. The tonal results of scores of instruments were analyzed, their faults determined, the causes ascertained. The skill of the Aeolian staff and many consultants, high authorities on the science of tone, was brought to bear upon the multitude of problems.

From this persistent work, progressing steadily and painstakingly, there evolved a remarkable instrument—one which was pronounced superior by everyone who heard it, absolutely unique in the perfection of its reproductions. But it was not at once marketed. There was no haste. The Aeolian Company is the world's leading musical house—makers of the finest and most costly types of instruments.

An Aeolian product is of unquestioned quality, well-seasoned quality.

So it was some time later, after a revolutionary invention had been added, that the wonderful new phonograph was announced to the public as the Aeolian-Vocalion.

No claim is made that the Aeolian-Vocalion is the final perfection of the phonograph. But in it has been attained such an artistic and musical excellence that it is commanding the attention even of those who heretofore have refused the phonograph serious consideration. The Vocalion has won its way into the palaces of Royalty abroad and the finest homes of America. Everywhere its revolutionary expression device—the Graduola—has been a revelation as full of interest as its broader tonal powers.

-VOCALION

ENHANCED in BEAUTY
INSTRUMENT THAT YOU CAN PLAY

ON THESE pages are six illustrations showing in miniature some of the most popular cabinet models of the Aeolian-Vocalion. They suggest the quiet beauty of design that is characteristic of every Vocalion case style.

They indicate also how delightfully the Vocalion harmonizes with every type of interior.

The Vocalion case woods are dark, rich mahogany, handsomely figured circassian walnut or oak. Finishing by the same processes employed upon fine piano cases brings out to the greatest extent, the beauty of these rare woods.

In the new Book of the Vocalion, all of the conventional models and a few of the magnificent art styles are illustrated. The very simple fundamentals of the science of acoustics as applied to the phonograph are outlined. The basis of phonograph quality is set forth so clearly as to be of inestimable value to every intending purchaser of an instrument of this type.

This handsome book will be mailed free upon request together with information as to where in your vicinity the Vocalion may be seen and played. Address Department V121.

Vocalion prices are $35 to $350.
Art styles to $2000.

THE Vocalion tone is imbued with vital personality—your own—and each repetition of a record discloses novel and unexpected beauties. Since, by means of the Graduola, the exclusive Vocalion expression device, each tone, every phrase, answers your will as truly and certainly as if breathed from your lips.

The master artist's skill and sweet tone graven in the record become the voice of your heart, and at last you may enjoy the transcendent pleasure of making music instead of being a listener merely.

This wonderful new privilege of tone control makes the Vocalion more than a tone-reproducing instrument—in reality a remarkable new medium for musical expression.

Use the Graduola when you wish. It will bring you a clearer knowledge of, a new joy and belief in music. And when you prefer, the Vocalion plays itself as any other phonograph—but with its vastly more satisfying tone—its rich, full, natural tone.

The Graduola is without question one of the most important invention in the history of the phonograph. It has brought the instrument a greater dignity and distinction, a fresh importance to every lover of music.

TO MAKE A CHRISTMAS HOLIDAY

AMONG the many tribes which lend variety to the surface of the earth there's one more numerous than all the rest put together. It isn't the clan of bromides; it isn't even the artistic-temperament tribe; it's the eleventh-hour people. We all know them; we probably belong to them. They arrive just as the hostess decides to sit down without them; they catch a train by the rear platform just as it is pulling out; and they never, never do their Christmas shopping early. They mean to be on time, you know; it's simply that they can't help arriving at the tail end; it's hereditary or something like that.

ENTERTAINING THE CHRISTMAS SHOPPER

Still, Vogue doesn't intend to let any one suffer the pangs of last-minute presents just because somebody is constitutionally unable to go shopping in time. Vogue gets out its next issue for the especial benefit of the eleventh-hour shopper. In this number there will be ten or a dozen pages scintillating with brilliant ideas for Christmas gifts; one has only to choose from them, instead of making a mad rush into crowded shops.

But the Christmas solicitude of Vogue does not stop there. Worse predicaments exist than merely being late with your shopping. There's the man who wants to give a girl a present and who is confronted by the Victorian trilogy of books, flowers, or candy, at any of which she would turn up her twentieth century nose. His difficulties are solved in an article by Boutet de Monvel, who explains how even flowers may please if they are presented in the right way.

Nor is the hostess forgotten, the Christmas hostess who is expected to devise new entertainments just when she is developing melancholia because everything has been done before. Vogue proves that everything hasn't been done by staging a fancy dress party which sparkles with all the originality of Claire Avery. You can hold it outdoors on a rink or indoors among bewildering decorations. You can roll into it as a snowball or drip down upon it as an icicle, and all the costumes together make the whole seem like the palace of the Snow Queen. But there is still another fancy dress affair, one which Irma Campbell is conducting for the children. Who wouldn't shove back the wheel of time if they could hop merrily about as a Rainbow-Girl, a Ball-of-Yarn, a Merry-Go-Round, or a Peacock-Fan?

Vogue First Helps the Hostess to Entertain and Then Comes to the Rescue of the Eleventh-Hour Christmas Shopper

The cover of the next, the December 15 number of Vogue, is by E. M. A. Steinmetz.

In spite of its preoccupation with gifts and parties and other such frivolities, Vogue finds space, pages and pages of it, for the serious business of fashions. Though empires tumble down, Paris continues to direct the mode, and Vogue to defend these directions with its last drop of printer's ink. The stage is not neglected, of course; in fact, the next issue of Vogue is the best possible means of guiding your footsteps in the way they should go to the theatre. And then, to put a finishing touch to things, it has a few puffs for the smart smoking accessories for women.

ART AND ATMOSPHERE

For reasons best known to the submarines, people aren't crossing the ocean much these days, and the wonders of the old world are blushing unseen by Americans. Vogue does its best to remedy this state of affairs by publishing many pictures of the Palazzo Farnese at Caprarola, near Rome. This famous palace, built by the great architect, Vignola, is now being used as a war-relief station.

It is hoped that these beautiful illustrations will help to do something about the lack of art and atmosphere in this New World of ours. Perhaps you haven't heard of that? Then you must consult Baron de Meyer's article in the next issue. In spite of Washington Square and Greenwich Village, Baron de Meyer maintains that "atmosphere" in the European sense can never exist this side of the Atlantic.

MRS. ERNEST A. WILTSEE

After having spent the summer and the early autumn in her native America, Mrs. Wiltsee sailed late in October to return to her home in Paris, where she has lived since her girlhood. Mrs. Wiltsee, who was Miss Emily Stuart Taylor, is as noted for her beauty abroad as she is in these United States

Have you a little fountain in your home? If you haven't and you really see no particular reason why you should begin now, you may make a most realistic imitation fountain of crystal beads strung on wires. It is set in the middle of a long table, surrounded by a garland of flowers, and flanked by colorful fruit heaped in dishes of amber Venetian glass and by bayberry candles in candlesticks of black lacquer

THE ARTIST LAYS THE CHRISTMAS TABLE

THE modernist has so much to say in the interior decoration of these days that it seems almost his duty to take up that time-honored institution, the Christmas table, which by force of perennial recurrence threatens to become hackneyed unless some force shall instil new life into its long-accepted decorations. Red and green, holly and mistletoe, Christmas bells and evergreen, are all very well, but the modernist says old things in new ways and from him should come suggestions for that unusual note which shall make this year's festival other and more decorative than the festivals of other years.

My last Christmas dinner in England evokes charming memories, for my hostess was a delightful woman of taste, artistic temperament, and savoir faire. She began the innovation by having her table covered with a sheet of heavy and shaggy white silk plush, simulating a snow-covered ground. Large balls, one foot in diameter, and made entirely of white blossoms, were placed at the center as well as at each end of the table. Each "snowball" was surrounded by a garland of red berries, frosted and besnowed. Garlands of berries connected the wreaths. Amongst these there were candelabra of a beautiful French porcelain, entirely white with masses of candles and green shades which gave an old-fashioned and homely atmosphere and shed a delightfully soft old-time light on the table, on which no electricity was permitted to fall. The dinner service was bright green, and a wreath of red berries surrounded each plate. There was no striving after originality or bizarre effect; it was just a merry and lovely Christmas dinner in an old-fashioned and cosy, oak-paneled, country dining-room, with the logs burning on the hearth and a Christmas tree covered with silver stars and burning wax candles shedding its warm glow. Such a happy festival sets a bright standard for the modernist, who must make our Christmas externally different without altering one jot of the former spirit.

DINNER AFTER VERONESE

A dinner to which I was asked in London on the last Christmas before the war broke out, was a wonderful variant of the accepted Christmas dinner. The guests all appeared in Venetian costumes of the sixteenth century, for the dinner was arranged

Lest by Sheer Force of Perennial Recurrence, the Christmas Feast Become Stereotyped, Let Us Instil into Its Setting the Freshening Spirit of the Modernist

after the suggestions of the famous Veronese painting in the Venice Gallery of the Belle Arte. The table was of horseshoe shape, that is, it ran along three sides of the large dining-room, and the guests sat with their backs to the wall, leaving the opposite side of the table empty. A covering in cloth of silver was used, and this was taken down to the floor on the inner side of the table. Deep red velvet bows were placed at each angle and festoons, or rather garlands, of blood-red roses hung from bow to bow. Gold plate, goblets, and dishes of luscious fruit were placed at given intervals. Large bowls filled with beautiful Madonna lilies stood at the center and angles of each of the three tables. The space between the tables was covered by a deep red carpet and kept entirely free for the servants who waited on the guests from this side and who wore liveries inspired by costumes of that period.

A more modern and quite charming scheme for a dinner, which I remember (appropriate to Easter rather than to Christmas, however), was a decoration in Parma violets with a turquoise blue dinner service and Venetian glass of white and blue. By a peculiar and artful device of wiring the violets and their long stems, they were made into round clusters which, when placed at the top of a small pole, about eight or ten inches in height and covered in light greenery, gave one an impression of little violet palm trees. These little trees, about a dozen of them, were placed all around the circular table and connected by very light garlands of deep colored violets. The center of the table was left bare and the light coming from above cast a warm glow on the entire arrangement. Such an arrangement could easily be adapted in appropriate Christmas flowers.

QUESTIONS OF LINEN

Whether for the Christmas festival or for year-round entertaining, the subject of table linen deserves serious consideration, all by itself, especially since over-elaboration and luxury in that as in other things has become so universal. The juste milieu is so rarely preserved, for infinitely more people have money at their disposal than have good taste and few are sufficiently aware of the fact to place the arrangement of such matters into competent hands. It is given to but few to have really good and sure taste, but few people realize how precious a gift it is. Those blessed with it should be made much of and their advice and services valued.

To go back to table-cloths, the very usual and prevalent fashion now is to use none at all, for luncheon at least, and to have a beautiful table top in some fine and highly polished wood, mellowed by age or simply well polished. Marble is also used, but this always seems a very chilly proposition. It also causes more or less

Any one can hang a hackneyed wreath in the window; it's only a favored few who can think of decorating it with a garland of flowers, holly, mistletoe, grapes, lady apples, and dwarf oranges, held together by wires and hung from dull gold cords apprehension as to glass and china being damaged by a too sudden contact with the table. At a fashionable house at Newport this summer, I saw a charming cloth which was used for breakfast and small luncheons. At the four corners of the beautiful square of linen, great tassels of crochet and linen cords weighted the cloth and swung below the table top.

There is some meaning behind the phrase "Merry Christmas" when one's table is as gay as this one. The centerpiece is of fruit—any sort of fruit one can think of, just so long as it has color—and the table is lighted by four lamps shaded in old-rose silk, which hang from the ceiling on tasseled silver cords. It's a wise hostess who provides rose-shaded lights; they do more for the complexion than any beauty cream that has ever been put on the market.

Laces, unless beautiful old filet or guipure is available, should be avoided. They are far too dangerous unless used with perfect and sure judgment. No color of any sort should be introduced into the formal table linen. I have seen such terrible "modern" table linen, such horrible arrangements of lace, colored muslins, and sea-green tarlatans with yellow daffodils embedded in clouds of these materials, that I can hardly emphasize sufficiently how much they should be avoided. I daresay I shall be thought very old-fashioned and conservative, but it seems to me that if table-cloths are used at all, there is nothing so distinguished as an exquisite quality of fine damask linen, carefully ironed and glazed and spotlessly white. Of course, any decoration of a dinner table under such circumstances must necessarily confine itself to the more usual and conservative use of a centerpiece containing a beautiful floral decoration, some smaller vases filled with the same blossoms, and two or more candelabra of silver or of some antique and rare material; these are placed on the plain white cloth.

TO NEW HOMES, NEW TABLES

There is no doubt that in fashionable and aristocratic mansions, be they in Paris, London, or in country houses where tradition and old-time customs reign, no bizarre or recherché table decorations would be tolerated. The finest linen, the finest old family plate, the most exquisite and choicest flowers in rare and unique jardi-

The holiday tea is an assured success if refreshments are served at a buffet arranged with this decorative formality. The buffet is covered with a cloth of filet lace and upon it are placed a compote of deep purple Venetian glass heaped with grapes, a dish of dull gold Venetian glass containing fruit, and two tall carved candlesticks of dull gold.

nières, are the only table decoration with which one ever meets. Somehow, in such century-old houses with an atmosphere of gradually collected and accumulated treasures, all new and charming little schemes have a way of seeming childish and irrelevant. These essentially modern table decorations are more suited to modern surroundings, to apartments, to new and delightful houses where amusing and charming originality makes up for the absence of magnificent and traditional simplicity.

An invitation to dinner. How simple this sounds—how momentous it really is! These few words may mean almost anything. To women, they perhaps mean an opportunity of appearing in their newest gowns, to maidens fair, the hope of a right or left hand neighbor, possibly the right man; to the bachelor, they signify economy and a change from the restaurant bill of fare, to gourmets, the hope of something exquisite and refined, and to men and women of society (in every sort of society) that flattering conviction that they are sought after, popular, and in request. Last, but not least, it may be a satisfaction, if the dinner is an exclusive one, to know that some of their best friends have not been invited.

FOOD FOR WIT

Yet a dinner has always seemed to me a barbaric custom. I remember Eleanora Duse once told me that she never shared her meals with anyone, not even with her most intimate friends. She felt that eating was an ugly thing in itself and that it should be indulged in only in private. Yet these are evidently exceptional views; the majority would consider them absurd, and all customs which the majority sanctions are supposed to be right—so, at least we are taught. After all, there must be something in this way of celebrating the Christmas festival, for in all times festive meetings have usually meant banquets of one sort or another. The beauty-loving Greeks and the luxury-loving (Left) It is pleasant to have a garden as centerpiece; one is so sure that no other hostess will think of doing it, and that gives one the proper Christmas spirit. The flat gray blue dish holding pond-lilies is surrounded by a tiny box hedge with roses.

Romans both thought it advisable to encourage digestion through the exchange of ideas. Unfortunately, nowadays this wonderful plan seems in danger of failing through the impossibility of obtaining ideas to exchange. However, this is perhaps but the unjust pessimism of one who has seen too many Christmas festivals. No doubt the débutantes of to-day and their inarticulate partners consider their fêtes unsurpassed by any Athenian symposium. We have heard of Belshazzar and his feasts, of Lucullus dining with Lucullus (a gentleman partial to his own society), later of Gargantua of illustrious memory, and of many another great epicurian. All confirm the fact that if conversational powers, friendly intercourse, witty epigrams are to abound, the appetite must first be duly catered to.

It is true beyond question that a man who before breakfast is grouchy, melancholy, and practically without command of thought or language, becomes towards dinner time verbose and brilliant, and at supper time even witty. It is strange to think that food can loosen the tongue of the most silent, could perhaps even render a congenial idiot loquacious if scientists chose to make a proper research as to what food he ought to eat, and above all, with whom he should share it.

The artists, however, may find attractions other than fashion, food, or wit in an invitation to dinner. They are the people who love to be asked out to dinner merely because they like to see things. Their appreciation of brilliant conversation may be secondary, their palates insensitive to exquisite dishes, but not dull is their vision. They want to see, and they love to see, beautiful women sitting around the beautifully appointed dinner table; they love the soft lights, the flowers, all the exquisite perfection that appeals to the eye. They are amused; they do not take these functions seriously but it is to them a lovely pastime, a treat, a holiday for the man who between times thinks and works.

WHEN THE ARTIST DINES

For them a beautiful table decoration is a real pleasure. Among those who love a festival dinner for what they see there, I claim my place, and from this point of view, I would offer suggestions. A great deal has already been done to make the setting of dinner a thing of beauty, yet I cannot help thinking that there may be much room for improvement. My imagination, wandering as imaginations do at a dinner party, has often created what at the time I believed to be marvels of originality in table decoration, though sometimes, alas, like other "castles" they prove very difficult, if not impossible of execution. I have one scheme, however, which seems both original and easy to carry out. It consists of a tablecloth in ecru linen to represent a pebbled terrace, flower-beds made of small and bright-hued blossoms, lightly massed and slightly raised, within set designs of lines or circles. One large bed occupies the center of the table and four or six oval beds, according to the space, are set all around. Between these are small flowering trees in tubs, a dozen or so, placed in rather formal fashion as they would be placed in a French garden, which is, of course, the fundamental idea back of this decoration.

(Below) This is what happens when one hangs a Chinese red lacquer basket from red cords, stops it just short of resting on the table, and trails from it garlands of flowers and mistletoe

(Below) From the tiny boxwood tree at each corner of the table to the boxwood tree in the middle run strings of gay beads. Candles surround the center-tree, and (think of what goes on inside Miss Dryden's head) all the trees are sprayed with sky-blue paint

A room given over to the modern fad of black might, for an occasional luncheon or dinner, have the table covered with black satin or sateen and the table covered with all the brightest blossoms of the old-fashioned garden varieties, from which the green leaves and stems should be removed. It will be found that most unexpected harmonies will blend as soon as green leaves are eliminated. No doubt some people will dislike this idea, feeling that green leaves are essential to complete a floral decoration, but I do not agree with them. Let them try my suggestion and see whether they do not come to agree with me.

There should be no high vases on the table; the flowers having no stems should lie flat on the cloth, always carrying out the idea of an embroidered decoration. The dinner service, by contrast with the black cloth, should be of vivid and old-fashioned green porcelain. I have decorated my own table in this way sometimes and found the scheme effective and not difficult to execute; it is neither bizarre nor too recherché. The table, in this case, was lacquered black and consequently needed no cloth.

LET US DINE IN BEAUTY

If, in conventional or bizarre surroundings, people young, or old, beautiful or vulgar, always have and always will foregather around a long, an oval, or a round table, witily destroying reputations or brilliantly exchanging ideas as they dine—if this has to be and will remain an everlasting institution, let us at least surround the elementary materialism of the action with all the beauty and luxury of our ancestors or which our own mere modern brains have taught us. Let us by all means strengthen and nourish our depleted physical selves, and let us, at this season, do so in surroundings which afford a new expression of the old Christmas spirit.

PARIS SINGS THE WEARING O' THE GREEN

She was young and she was fair, and she walked in the Bois. Upon her head was a mourning bonnet with a band of ermine about it and a facing of white in the peak!

The Time, the Place, or the Fabric Makes No Difference; the Parisienne's Day Is Not Complete Unless She Wears the Color of Spring

Not just as the other mourning bonnets is this one, for the veil is short and it has a bride of white crêpe with which the wearer binds her chin in somewhat the same way as a nun

SWEET ALICE was tucked away in an orchestra chair at the Théâtre Porte St. Martin, with a fur manteau thrown comfortably about her shoulders and a bag of chocolates in her lap. Not a paper bag—oh no! To the uninitiated the fur-and-gold bag held a pair of opera-glasses, a tiny bottle of scent, and all the other wee frivolities which these bags are supposed to contain. But I knew Alice and I knew that no matter what bag she carried, it would be full of chocolates.

She was nibbling her first choice when the curtain rose on the first act of Octave Feuillet's play, and had finished her third when the woes of pretty Berthe de Savigny began, after which the bag lay unheeded in her lap. The play progressed and presently Mme. Simone, who played the leading rôle, walked on to the stage wearing a wonderful Chéruit frock of metallic tissue—gold and blue, with blue and red bead embroidery. The skirt was short in front, showing silk-clad ankles, and about each ankle sparkled a hoop of brilliants!

THE DIAMOND ANKLET

I looked at the anklets and then at Alice, whose blue eyes were widening with surprise. In a moment she turned to me with an awe-struck whisper.

"Did you see them?"

"What?" I parried.

"The bracelets—on her ankles. Diamonds—and two of them!" She leaned forward in her chair, breathless, her eyes fixed on those blazing circlets. And I could see that she was turning over in her mind the possibility of having sundry armlets, rings, and other trinkets, of her own tossed into the melting-pot to emerge in the form of bracelets for her own slim ankles.

Mme. Simone appeared again in a riding habit and agonized through the poison scene, but still the blue eyes were fixed on bracelets—ankle-bracelets formed of brilliant stones. The curtain was going down for the last time when she turned eagerly.

"I'll have enough to go half-way round," she said. "I suppose I could use constructed stones for the rest."

"You could, but you won't," said I severely. "—until you're thirty!"

But Alice lifted a serene eye-brow. "There is no such thing," she said, "as age."

We had risen to pass out when I trod on something that crushed abominably under my foot. It was the bag of chocolates.

THE VANISHING TAXI

"Le Sphinx" at the Porte St. Martin has proved very attractive to Parisians. Not even the difficulty of procuring taxis after the play—a very real difficulty at present—prevents the house from being crowded every night.

What time one can spare from the all-absorbing topics of frocks and the war is spent in wondering what has become of the few remaining motor vehicles which survived the battle of the Marne. Lately they seem to have vanished from the streets. Long relied-on "ranks" have disappeared utterly. Arrivals at the Paris terminals, surrounded by their luggage, are forced to wait a weary while before securing one of the wheezing decrepit "autos" which represent almost the only means of locomotion in Paris at present. Is it a scarcity of gasoline or a lack of chauffeurs? Or have the poor old taxis, like the "one-hoss-shay" of ancient rhyme, gone to pieces "all at once."

The taxi has become a veritable will-o'-the-wisp. You glimpse one in the distance and follow it blindly, risking life and limb in the chase; and when in the course of the pursuit you have arrived at the spot where it appeared to be—lo, it has vanished miraculously from the scene. One follows it in vain, this Flying Dutchman of the Paris streets. The phantom driver heeds no signal, the gaunt machine halts for no obstacle on its endless course. The Paris taxi has become one of the mysteries.

Sacha Guitry's new play, "Faisons un Rêve," at the Bouffes-Parisiens, affords the inimitable Sacha another opportunity to delight Parisians with his talent—an opportunity in which he is ably seconded by Charlotte Lysès. The play is in the last degree delicious. M. Guitry possesses the rare gift of "reaching" his audience directly—of establishing friendly relations across the foot-lights almost from the moment he appears on the stage; and he sustains this relation to the final curtain.

Charlotte Lysès was charmingly frocked by Jenny, and her costumes included one of Bordeaux velvet trimmed with taupe rabbit, one of black satin much embroidered with gold in a Japanese design and another very simple frock of white crêpe de Chine. A "peignoir" of startling pattern, which was amiably loaned to her at a critical period in the play and which clothed her slender figure most absurdly, was not, however, sketched.

SPONSOR OF THE CHEMISE FROCK

Mme. Jenny, who launched the chemise frock a season or two ago and to whom this fashion is an old but still interesting story, is still making these simple effective frocks and a number of her latest creations have been sketched. Skirts are longer at the Maison Jenny and measure perhaps two and a half meters in width. The low belt insisted upon by this house two seasons ago is still employed, and Japanese embroideries play an important part in the decoration of the new models. Mme. Jenny also makes most effective and artistic use of beads.

Chéruit has been busily frocking some visiting Americans, among them Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Miss Elsie de Wolfe, and Mrs. Pierpont Morgan. For the Princesse Faucigny-Lucinge, Chéruit has just made the green cheviot frock sketched at the left below. The jacket is close-fitting to the waist and flares widely in godets from each hip, producing a very wide effect above the somewhat narrower underskirt. The sleeves are long and close and, oddly enough, are not edged with fur at the wrists.

For Mme. Simone, Chéruit has just made the pretty frock sketched at the lower right on this page. Of dark blue serge, it is trimmed generously with skunk, opening in front over an embroidered gilet of striped silk. A chemise by nature, when viewed from the back it resembles a tailored frock, and it is altogether very pretty and wearable.

THE ENCROACHING FUR FLOUNCE

The deep fur band on the bottom of the manteau or winter jacket has become in many cases a veritable flounce of fur. One new and very odd coat of black velvet of the close-bodied, full-skirted type, has a collar of black velvet buttoned to the chin and falling again to the shoulders, and the sleeves are finished with deep velvet cuffs. The top of the coat is thus quite untripped with fur, but a fur flounce extending from hips to shoe-tops shows us that while it may have its ups and downs rabbit is still in fashion.

Some women are never satisfied. When they are too young to wear a train, they sigh for one; when they have one, they want two. We wonder what this Parisienne wants, for her Chéruit gown of blue and gold lamé tissue embroidered in old-blue and red beads has two trains, one on either side

CHÉRUIT

Every opportunity is provided this season for the wearing of the green. Chéruit made this gray-green cheviot suit trimmed with mole for the Princess Faucigny-Lucinge. The sleeves, contrary to all expectations are innocent of fur

For all his agility the nimble monkey has not been quick enough to evade the clutches of the couturiers. Witness this Chéruit coat of French blue velvet trimmed on its collars (there are two of them) with monkey skin

CHÉRUIT

While the Maison Chéruit has been busy frocking visiting Americans, it has not been neglecting fellow countrywomen. For Mme. Simone, it made this dark blue serge frock trimmed with skunk and open in the front over a gilet

Frocking a child is a matter of great moment to Mme. Lanvin; no detail is neglected from the crown of her head to the tip of her tiny shoes. This frock is of old-blue taffeta girdled with skunk. The medieval cap and the shoes are of king's blue velvet glistening with embroideries of blue and gold beads

Green has suddenly stepped into favor. For almost any occasion and almost any hour of the day some shade of green in some certain tissue is smart. Chéruit trims a tailleur of gray-green cheviot with taupe. Premet trims dark green velours de laine with gray rabbit or castor, and dark green velvet or velours de coton is smart for the afternoon frock as well as for the boudoir gown. In short every opportunity is provided, this season, for the wearing of the green.

The pepper-and-salt mixture which has been worn a bit in Paris of late is smart but not always becoming. A manteau of this rather harsh-colored stuff, corded near the bottom and on the huge pockets, is trimmed with broad bands of silver rabbit. A pretty trimming for a chemise frock of black velvet consists of bands cut from India print, with the small bright patches of color helped out with bead embroidery. A black and white print thus embroidered with jet and trimmed with otter makes a most effective boudoir gown.

The flounces, panniers, and peplums in front only, which astonished our eyes at the mid-summer openings, have not as yet been much worn in Paris, where the chemise reigns supreme. Lately we have seen a bit more of the moyen age version of the chemise frock—the long, more or less fitted corsage with the full skirt attached; and this new style is making a strong bid for popularity.

The frock without fur is now very smart. This one is of pale yellow crêpe Georgette embroidered with crystal rose and green beads

The pocket has enjoyed a most picturesque career. "Frocks is as pockets does" runs the revised version of an old saying. And surely all that pockets can do, pockets have done these last two seasons. The frock has become in some instances a mere "accessory after the fact" of the pocket. A book the size of Gibbon's "Rome" might be written on the rise and fall of the pocket—except that the "fall" of the pocket is not yet. The newest out-standing pockets, when not edged with fur, are lined with tissue of some contrasting color—a color which usually appears elsewhere on the frock.

After hesitating between the canotier and the cloche, Paris has suddenly adopted the Russian turban. Usually of fur, it is often trimmed with a gold or silver cord and tassels. The lower part of the turban is sometimes made of embroidered tissue—gray velvet, for instance, embroidered with

It would almost seem that wherever the fingers of the mode have fallen this season they have left touches of silver, as on the pocket-like hip pieces and upon the girdle of this black velvet gown; these are of silver embroidered with black chenille. The collar is most unexpectedly made of gray rabbit

Whether the pater familias in the Bunting household would ever have reached home with the proverbial rabbit skin had he lived in the present day is an open question. Most likely a couturier whose shop he was obliged to pass would have lured it from him for some suit such as this of marine blue diagonal

Black and white becomes somehow appealingly youthful when combined in a gown which follows the contours of the figure in its bodice of white Georgette crêpe embroidered in black, and which flows out into a black satin skirt below a knotted white crêpe girdle

For Charlotte Lysès to wear in "Faisons un Rêve" at the Bouffes-Parisiens there has been fashioned a frock which is almost as much taupe rabbit as it is red velvet and almost as much collar as it is bodice; it is accompanied by a taupe rabbit muff silver thread, or pale coral velvet showing a similar tracery of metal. The top is usually of taupe.

Maria Guy is making toques of beaver, and odd smart round hats of stiffly plaited satin ribbon which are very striking. "Black and white" is the name given to a new Maria Guy model of black and white satin with the brim narrow and turning sharply back on itself in front and flaring broadly in the back. It is of black and white satin.

Lucie Hamar also features the Russian turban and—tell it not in Gath—some of her shapes are almost Turkish in character, which of course is very wrong, considering that Turkey does not enjoy the distinction of being an Ally. However this will not prevent us from wearing Hamar creations on our war-worn heads, for Mme. Hamar's shapes are always pleasing.

Mme. Lanvin makes of bright geranium red velvet a small round hat with a slightly draped rounded crown. It is worn with a blue serge frock. The turned-down collar and turned-back cuffs of this frock are faced with red cloth. A similar round shape at Lanvin's is covered with bits cut from an Indian shawl, and the base of the crown is encircled with a narrow band of skunk. Mme. Lanvin, by the way, is making most attractive frocks for children and is designing little moyen âge caps and shoes of beaded velvet to wear with them.

The beret is no more, although the tricorne is seen everywhere. The new tricorne is of the supple variety—no stiff angles nor fixed curves but a softer and more subtle creation. Almost Napoleonic is this new hat, usually of black velvet, often untrimmed, and oh, so chic. It is destined to have an enormous vogue.

Although one hears everywhere that we are growing tired of jersey, Parisians continue to buy and to wear frocks and cloaks of this flexible stuff. Mme. Chanel who still continues to design frocks of jersey to satisfy her clients, is also making many frocks and cloaks of cotton velvet, trimmed almost recklessly with fur. It is only by chance that the entire garment is not made of fur, at Chanel's.

In the Bois, one sees manteaux of heavy black satin trimmed with shaggy fur; cloaks of velours de coton in different shades of red, and many tailored costumes and coats of velours de laine. The new shaggy effects, in furs—skunk, bear, and kindred pelts—are very smart, affording real relief to our jaded eyes, which for so long have beheld rabbit and rabbit only. A. S.

(Left, above) It may be that the frock without fur is one of the "little economies" of the war, but there is no smarter frock. This one made its appearance in the Bois. It is of beige "poil droit" velvet and where the skirt buttons to the yoke the open godets are faced with black satin. The black satin hat is much like Monsieur's

(Right, above) One finds in Paris that it is the rabbit that has nine lives and most of them after death. Several of them are spending a life on this suit of blue cotton velours and on the Russian turban, which the Parisienne has adopted so that she may be spared deciding the question of whether to wear a "cloche" or a "canotier"

(Left) Green is smart any hour in Paris. Mlle. Rafale chooses it for a morning coat of cheviot worn with a black taffeta scarf and a "pantalon" skirt of black cloth. Mlle. Rafale will probably come to America and the American stage, soon

THE LAST WORD IN PARIS LINGERIE IS ALWAYS

BEING SAID; HERE MARTHE GAUTHIER SAYS IT

(Above) Scant? Well, you see, Irish crochet is in again, and we always did love it, though of course too much of it is—too much of it. So we compromised and made this brassière entirely of Irish crochet—by cutting out the rest of the brassière

(Above) You must get into it; that's obvious. As to whether or not you can get out again, that's different. Ask the Parisienne—if you know her well enough. Yes, it is—or are, pajamas. The material is pale pink crêpe de Chine trimmed with plaited, pointed folds of itself

(Above) What in the world? The progressive blouse on the lines of a man's shirt, and the lower part, which, just to be contrary, cut itself with the most conservative Turkish scissors, are together a lounging robe. The pity is, that being so independent, it should have omitted pockets

(Right) The top—lo, the poor laundress!—is of cream colored tulle edged with cream lace. Below lies nearly half a yard of pink voile de soie and eight pink rosebuds. Two of the latter got lost because they would go up to see the rose shoulder straps

(Left) Demure as a pilgrim's cockle-shells are the whorls of plaited rose silk on the lower edge of this—this pet-chemise, shall we call it? And yet at the last minute, perhaps in a spirit of revolt, to the belt was added so unsevere a thing as a tulle collar

PARISIENNES HAVE NO AGE, BUT WHEN THEY
 FACT, THEN THIS IS HOW THEY DRESS

(Left) They say that every one has two countries, his own—and France. It must have been a woman who said this first for where except in France (and France means Paris) can a woman reach the mellow age so becomingly? The secret of her charm is in the salon of the couturier; it is a frock such as this one of black satin and gray cloth trimmed with gray fox

(Right) When the débutante sighed, "And that's because I'm seventeen and she is forty-nine," she forgot that sometimes it's because forty-nine has visited Paris so many times. There one can learn all the little artful touches which transfigure a gown, such as the gilet of white and brown tulle on this afternoon gown of tête de nègre satin trimmed with black satin

The Parisienne goes walking in the Bois because her automobile has been commandeered, of course; and because exercise is a good thing anyway, and (should not the last be first?) because she has a smart new suit of corbeau blue velvet trimmed with taupe rabbit. Still another reason might be her Russian turban of taupe fur with embroidered taupe velvet

She of the years of discrimination will know that Parisiennes are adopting the wearing of green. That hopeful color appears everywhere, and here it is materialized in a coat of dark green velvet with collar and cuffs of castor. Her Russian turban of castor is likewise a modish sign of the times; it is the popular successor to the baret of the season

"THESE ARE MY JEWELS"

JEWELRY FROM CARTIER

Quaint Are the Ornaments of the Belle of Yesterday Beside the Miracles in Jewels That Cartier Performs for the Woman of Today

AN interesting anecdote is told regarding the versatility of French jewelers. It was at an official dinner after the great Franco-Prussian war, and the future governor of Alsace-Lorraine, Baron de Manteuffel, was seated next to a French diplomat, who was endeavoring to convince his German neighbor of the superiority of the French workman and who proudly asserted that there was nothing so ugly that it could not in their hands be transformed into a graceful article. Somewhat annoyed, the old de Manteuffel pulled a hair of his white beard and handing it over to the French diplomat challenged him to have an appropriate ornament made of that. The Frenchman accepted the challenge and gave the hair to a Paris jeweler with an order to create from it a worthy and patriotic article. A few days later there came to de Manteuffel a parcel containing a pin representing the German eagle holding in his bill the white hair on which was hung the arms of Alsace-Lorraine; above the eagle's head was the inscription, "You hold them only by a hair."

This was only one of many war souvenirs originated by the jewelers, for in the seventies, as in the present war, the makers of jewels displayed much ingenuity in the making of trifles—often very costly ones—to serve as mementos of the war. Two of these war jewels are reproduced at the top of page 162.

Flexible earrings, averaging three inches in length and set all in diamonds were most fashionable in the period just following the war, and bracelets anywhere from one and one-half to two inches wide in the center, tapering to half an inch near the clasp, and set in diamonds with a sapphire, an emerald, or a ruby of good size as the center motif, were high in favor at this

Upon Miss Gordon's stately head is set a diadem of diamonds set in platinum, and from her ears drip gracefully long and flexible earrings, also of diamonds set in platinum. The necklace is an example of the highest art of jewel-making; it is formed of two chains set solidly with diamonds, from the lower of which hang pendants composed of large diamonds surrounded by small ones. So perfectly is the necklace made that, when it is worn, each pendant falls in its appointed place, at exactly the right distance from its neighbor. At the right is photographed a novel brooch of diamonds and onyx, set in platinum. From it drop flexible diamond and onyx pendants

This bandeau was made to sparkle on an ultra-modern coiffure. It is an extremely flexible ornament of diamonds and onyx, set, of course, in platinum in a design of marvelously delicate intricacy. Posed by Miss Kitty Gordon

(Above) This diamond and onyx bracelet is a current event in the jewel world. It is a flexible band of exquisitely cut emeralds, artfully combined with diamonds

(Above) After the Empire, every woman felt she must have a jeweled collar. This one is of blue enamel inlaid with tiny diamonds. Even then, ornaments were made flexible

When Napoleon III was Emperor, ornaments like this were worn hanging over the hand or turned back over the sleeve like a cuff. They were flexible bands of diamonds set in gold or silver instead of the platinum we should use

They say that one of the first flexible bracelet made was this one of diamonds set in gold. The smart way to wear a bracelet then was either just below the elbow or between the elbow and the shoulder, instead of in the modern way

MARY NASH, WHO IS ALWAYS A SUCCESS, WHATEVER SHE MAY ELECT TO APPEAR IN, ACHIEVES A VERITABLE TRIUMPH IN THESE EVENING COSTUMES

MODELS FROM FRANKLIN SIMON

(Left) Some women were born to wear evening gowns, some women acquire the habit, and some women,—well, some women obviously have their evening gown thrust upon them. The way Mary Nash wears an evening gown is a natural talent. This is how she looks in a frock of yellow silk net and silver-brocaded yellow silk. A succession of net ruffles occurs at the sides of the skirt, and the back and front are panels of brocaded silk. The bodice is mostly of brocaded silk, pointed sharply at the front; net, drawn softly over the shoulders, is tied in bow-knots

Photographs on these pages by Emil

(Right) "The world is mine" is evidently the meaning of this pose, and the world would surely belong to any woman who wore a frock like this one. The overskirt and the lower part of the bodice are of white satin, splashed with great velvet roses in shades of rose and gray and lavender. The underskirt is of white silk net banded with silver lace, and so is the upper part of the bodice. Silver ribbon marks that place where the bodice ends and the skirt begins

(Below) An evening wrap—the right sort of an evening wrap, that is,—is the end of a perfect day, and this one is a fitting climax to any twenty-four hours, however successful. It is of emerald green velvet, banded narrowly with kolinsky. Miss Nash is concealing something from us; the silk lining is printed with startling Chinese designs in colors

(Above) Miss Nash is indeed possessed of will power if she can write a note while she is wearing this gown; no other woman living could concentrate on the letter and stop thinking of how charming she was looking. The frock is of metal cloth, silver and mauve—just think of it. There is a wide band of silver lace around the skirt, and a tiny frill of silver lace around the scalloped hem. Metal cloth forms part of the bodice and mauve tulle goes the rest of the way, and there is a knot of silk flowers at the front. Furniture in these photographs from the Hampton Shops

The DAY'S PLAY at HOT SPRINGS

WHEN the country homes at the summer resorts have been closed, there is still an interval of autumn before society feels that it can return to town for the gaieties of the winter season. Now a vacuum of time is not only abhorrent, it is not fashionable; one must be doing something, and so one goes to one of the southern springs, perhaps to Hot Springs, Virginia. That is to say, one goes if there is room, for Hot Springs is smaller than Palm Beach, and consequently there is space for fewer guests. But this, of course, adds the charm of exclusiveness, and it is practically the same group of smart people who, year after year, flock to the Springs, engaging the same rooms in advance, so that outsiders find it difficult to get in. From all the summer resorts consecrated by fashion, from

Thoughts on Christmas Living and Christmas Giving, Now That the High Prices for Simply Living Are Well-nigh Prohibitive

THE theme of Christmas is, nowadays, Christmas gifts. I feel utterly helpless before it, because I know how much fuller and better such a theme will be presented on every page of this magazine than I can do it, and how eagerly this year as every other year you and I will hurry greedily to get our gifts first.

Take an old gentleman's word for it, fair ladies, a man will accept gladly any—nearly any—token of good-will from your dainty hands. Perhaps I should reserve the old prejudice against women choosing ties and cigars, and I naturally might resent just a bit being likened unto a Tommy and receiving a comforter or a respirator or a package of chocolate; otherwise I put myself upon record as willing to be glad and grateful for everything—nearly everything—which may come my way.

NOW, I WOULD LIKE A—

Now there are people from whom I have great expectations. There is a rich maiden aunt who might send a nice four-figured cheque or a trifle of that kind. Not that I need the amount, but then such offerings are in keeping with the position and circumstances of the donor. As a matter of fact, I shall probably receive a Christmas card from her. Otherwise, what do I wish? Well, I really do not, as I have said before, expect much. Although I have had to give serious thought to the necessity of building an addition to my garage at my little place in the country, still I might find room for just one more car. And yet again, perhaps a gift of gasoline would be the better appreciated in these days of high prices for simply living. And in our day of free commerce of opinion a man need not fear outrage to his tastes in the feminine selection of tobacco and haberdashery and the like. I disagree with three quarters of my fair friends as to their particular pet brand of cigarettes, and as I always let them know the kind I like, there is no excuse for their making a mistake. I do not know any woman who would dare send me cigars; but if she did, she would have the good sense to consult her father, her brother, or even her husband. At least, she could find out in some deft manner exactly what I do smoke. Everything of that sort is so easy now. At all the shops (that is, of course, of the better class) there are experts who know a thing or two, and who keep track of one's personal tastes.

Then there are books,—so safe and easy. Then again, we may exchange personal Christmas cards. These are entirely indispensable. They give us many genuine greetings from many many friends. We can not have too many of these little souvenirs. They are so altogether charming nowadays and so much in the spirit of the season. Quite different they are from the tinsel snow cards and the other horrors of Christmas cards of a decade ago. I wonder why no one has ever thought of making a collection of these antiquities? It would be quite interesting, showing how we have emerged from the darkness into the dawn of a new era. We can well afford to look backward and smile at our mistakes of other years.

One word more on Christmas gifts. I never give old or middle-aged people or those who are decrepit or infirm anything to remind them of their condition, like slippers or spencers or warm and homely house-gowns. If we were tangoing this year, I would propose to my venerable grandmother that I pay for lessons for her. You see what I mean?

NOW DON'T GIVE ME HAIR TONIC

I myself stick to my old habit of prowling around the side streets at dusk in search of bargains, and of discovering each day some new and remarkable shop just off the Avenue. I spent a day last week at that interesting shop on the down-town west side, immortalized by the pencil of F. Hopkinson Smith. I had had lunch there with a delightful friend of mine who bobs her hair. (It was "burnished copper" and very curly, so one could hardly reprove her; and anyway, now that it is bobbed, I suppose there is nothing to be done.) Anyway, after luncheon, we delved into the dusty, musty, and altogether delightful shop below-stairs, and a large Damascus sword fell on my head. Fortunately, it fell on the side of my head where my hair is still thick. I hesitate to think what damage it might have inflicted had it hit it elsewhere.

The little salesgirl told me I ought not to have been in the cellar anyway,—it was

When it was rumored that Miss Anne Morgan was coming home, it was wondered in the same breath what she would do here for her wounded soldiers. The first thing was a benefit to be given at the Madison Square Garden on November 28. With her, as she left the "Lafayette" on October 16, was Mr. Herbert L. Satterlee (Above) Mrs. Cyril Hatch and Mr. William K. Vanderbilt. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt returned on the "Lafayette", and, naturally, Mrs. Hatch was the first one, even before the camera man, to greet her mother, who has been aiding the American Ambulance in Paris closed. It was not. But no matter; we will not quibble, since it was I who was hit.

LET US BE THANKFUL EVEN FOR RELATIVES

Of course, we are going ye old trend, Uncle George and I. I always close the country place the first week in December; that is, technically close it, for of course I leave there a small force of servants in case I should wish to give a week-end. This I do, by the way, if the weather is at all favorable, for I dislike the town on Sunday. Then I generally come up to the "farm" sometime during the Christmas week.

With me Christmas will always be a family festival. At least once a year we must look to the assembling of the clan. Surely, this is as it should be. Even though, at times, it is a bit trying, there are duties which bring their own reward—sometimes. In America we have grown callous, and we are prone, too prone, to poke fun at the sentimentality which is often, indeed, a bit sickly and which often does seem ridiculous. For instance, some good moralist told us that we should always have Christmas in our hearts. This is all very well; but one day or week of it is all that I can stand, thank you. Yet I believe firmly in the call of the blood. Must we have as terrible an awakening as our cousins on the other side of the Atlantic? God forbid! Family ties, those which have not been torn asunder, are indeed cherished by them now. The old cynicism of the Shaw days has gone. It crumbled to pieces even before the invasion of Belgium was over. Fortunately they are, over there, becoming in a way used to the new conditions. Only the other day I received an acknowledgment of some poor words of condolence of mine sent to a cherished friend, an English gentlewoman. Three of her boys have fallen at the front and her race, a noble one, has been nearly swept away; yet she found genuine comfort in an autograph letter of sympathy from George and Mary. Not that I need be cynical

ACCOMPLISHING CHRISTMAS

If You Only Take Trouble Enough Christmas
Will Be Worth All Your Trouble, for Though
Ready-Made Happiness May Please Children,
Grown-ups Want Theirs Made to Order

IT is a sad thing to grow reasonable about Christmas; and yet it happens to us all. While we were children, the day was perfectly a miracle, when, for no other cause than the arbitrary revolution of the seasons, parties were made for us and presents given beyond the dream of our desire. Nothing to do but count the days, until (whether we counted them or not) there broke upon us the inevitable bliss. We no more made it than we made the world; and that was the beauty of it.

THE first flaw came when we were asked what we would like to have: a hint of intelligence answering our explicit wants instead of magic which divined our secret longings; a tiny pang of reason gnawing at the edge of innocence. Then came the sickening disillusion about Santa Claus, as a substitute for whom our instinct rejected the priggish and impalpable "spirit of Christmas" with a wholesome and queasy scorn. And so on, bit by bit, until the day became no more a blessing made for us, but only an ordinary pleasure which we must make or else go wanting. They are fortunate, indeed, for whom it has never seemed that baser thing, a season of weariful reciprocities.

AND yet the change is not so wholly for the worse. For, if the day has altered, so have we; and whereas once our chief pleasure was in things coming to us, so now we care far more for what enjoyment we must go to meet. Anticipation, in either case, was half the fun; but we maturer folk anticipate more warmly what we have toiled to win than what we passively await. Who most enjoys amateur theatricals, however well they may be done—the audience, or the players? Or what house can match the one which you have planned and builded to your own fancy of what a house might be? The joy of making replaces the old wonder of discovery; and from explorers we have turned creators. Christmas no longer happens: it is done; but we prefer the doing.

THEREFORE to recapture the early glamor, we must follow it through labor of heart and hand. Wait for it merely, as of old, and you will, after all, despise its coming. Find it too carelessly, and you will care for it as little. Ask yourself what is the use, and you may be sure there can be none; for that question is always its own answer, and to doubt is to destroy your pleasure. But plan it long beforehand, the perfect holiday of your imagining; and having done so, go eagerly about to bring your bright imagination into being: not the conventional celebration perhaps; but what you in truth desire. You need not be too altruistic about it, either. If you want most your own pleasure, please yourself; you shall do well, even with respect to others; for how can you give them a delight which is not yours to give? It is not the quantity of the meat (said the Philosopher) but the cheerfulness of the guests, which makes the feast. Surely he might have added, and the cheerfulness of the host; for, in these days, a merry companion is both better and rarer than a peevish charity. Whatever it be, the more vividly you dream of your ideal Christmas, the more sedulously you work and plan to make your dream come true, so much the more may you be certain of satisfaction. It will be worth all your trouble, if only you take trouble enough.

AND in so doing, you may even awake again the childish joy itself, the very beauty of surprise which you have outgrown. Doing your best may well astonish you with success, finding more pleasure than you planned, and building better than you knew. As children we were often (you remember) a little disappointed, a trifle chilled by the sheer perfection of our own expectancy. We dreamed so supernatural a holiday as might hardly be, though all the Christmas forest blazed with lights and candles, or the blue sky of the Fourth should flaunt huge stars and stripes. But since then we have lost some power of anticipation only to gain more power of realizing. Time was when we expected more than could be found; now we find often more than we can expect. And that creator who sees his work turn out beyond intention, recaptures the lost magic of young astonishment. To be a child is good; yet better still it is to be a poet, at once child to enjoy and man to possess. And when we have accomplished this, we may even find that last fulfilment by remembering our holidays to make them holy.

Though adapted to suit the exigencies of city building, the Straight house, which faces Central Park in the upper residence section of Fifth Avenue, owes its design to that same Georgian influence which dominated American Colonial building. With entire architectural correctness, the same note leads in the interior of the house

Butternut of a rich warm brown panels the library to the ceiling, ending in a severe carved cornice. The recessed arches so characteristic of Georgian interiors become, by clever adaptation, recessed bookcases and carry color high on the walls in the rich bindings of their books. Red predominates in the handsome oriental rug, and much subdued red is used in the upholstery of the furniture. The many pieces of antique oak and walnut furniture accord with the brown of the butternut paneling and aid in creating for this modern house an atmosphere which asserts long descent

DELANO AND ALDRICH, ARCHITECTS.

NEW YORK HOME OF MR. WILLARD D. STRAIGHT

In the dining-room, ivory and blue are supported by dark tones in the furniture and in the flower panels of dark background, which hang against the paneling at intervals all the way around the room. Blue is the prevailing color in the oriental rug, and the Queen Anne chairs of walnut with gold mounts are upholstered in blue velvet. Oriental screens are placed in opposite corners. Though his furnishings are of many lands, there can be no doubt that Mr. Straight's patriotism is undivided; above the fireplace, the American eagle spreads sheltering wings above a portrait of George Washington

In the moulding around the antique overmantel above the Adam mantel was just a line of the elusive blue-green which is known as Adam green. But its influence was out of all proportion to its size, for from this little line of green came the color which flows unbroken over the paneling and woodwork of the room. The long draperies follow the same tone and are striped with gold. A Chinese Chippendale cabinet stands between the windows and there are other cabinets in lacquer. A delightful feature of this house is its large amount of window space

STATIONERY REQUIREMENTS OF THE MODE

The Letter of the Social Law Must Never Be Elaborate

Above is illustrated the house paper of several of the smartest New York hostesses, showing correct styles of stationery for country house correspondence

By the absence of intricate arabesques and mystic monograms from these letter headings, it is plain that legibility and conservatism are needful for smart stationery

HAPPY are the daughters of the Far East where that quaint figure, the public letter writer, sits at the street corner and pens the answers to one's correspondence in the correct and accepted form according to oriental etiquette. There the inexperienced woman is spared the doubts and misgivings incidental to her entry into society, when she receives all sorts of invitations which must be answered correctly at the peril of her place in the world. But it is different here where the woman of distinction is often indicated by her well-appointed writing-table with its correct paper for every occasion. There must be some which is conservative in style, but adapted for the little notes, some for the more formal letters, and some of the practical "house paper," suited for business letters and general household use. The fashionable woman may affect a most exquisite setting for the task of keeping up her correspondence; yet if one looks into the matter, it will be found that no business man has a better system of keeping the lists of his customers than she has of keeping the addresses of her guests.

INVITATIONS AND ANSWERS

The woman who has dozens of invitations to dinner answers them at once, while the woman to whom it is an event usually drives her hostess to distraction by delay. This delay may sometimes be due to the fact that the recipient of the invitation can not remember the exact and correct wording of such an answer; to meet this exigency, a few simple rules that are easily kept in mind may be of assistance. The first rule is to be provided with all the proper tools, which, primarily, means correct stationery. This must be a good quality of paper and a conservative adaptation of the prevailing mode, for highly colored paper with over elaborate marking is never a style which expresses good taste or distinction. Then a good ink and a pen which is adapted to one's style of handwriting makes the equipment complete.

(Below) Good form decided recently to approve of colored stationery, and some of the newest Italian paper is in brown and tan. Stationery from Dempsey and Carroll, Mark Cross, and Ovington

THE BEST FORM

The simplest rule is always to answer the invitation in the form in which it is written; that is, an invitation in the third person should be answered in the third person. A great many people err on the side of using the third person when a note in the first person would be appropriate, as for the acknowledgment of a wedding gift from a stranger to the bride-elect. Such an acknowledgment is always better made by a note written in a very friendly tone, such as the following note illustrates.

Whoso condemns the Parisienne because in war times she recklessly buys a bag like this, does not know that she will open this bag a hundred times for charity and each time with greater pleasure, but that never, never never would she produce a ragged old leather purse. This is of dark blue velvet beaded in dark reds, soft blues, and dull greens, and hung on a frame of galalite

It is plain that Mlle. Stasia Napierkowska knows that her hat looks not unlike a cardinal's hat. It is becoming, this affair of plain lines not too severe, of black panne not too somber because lightened by a motif of green leather beaded in old-gold and gems and held to the hat by faille ribbon; designed by Cora Marson

To put beads on in regular lines is hard enough, but the ivory white beads which form the background and handle of this bag have been put on with the same perfection of irregularity with which the sands of the sea are laid out. Then there is a bead pattern of green bands and pink roses to prove that with bags, as with the sands of the seas, there is a design behind everything.

After Mme. Jenny had created the startling black and white gown at the right of the page (it looks so simple and is so subtle) she powdered her nose, put subtlety behind her, and made this one above, which looks simple and is simple. It is just white crêpe de Chine, simply embroidered and tied with a simple pale blue satin sash; and it proves that its designer is simply French

The Parisienne inherited more of the primitive simplicity of Eve than have any others of her daughters, so that she takes naturally to such a frock as this above,—of black satin plaited and white mousseline-de-soie plain except for pipings of satin. Yet it is not all due to the Parisienne's simplicity that it is becoming; it is even more due to the complicity of Mme. Jenny

This creation at the left is not a toque nor a turban nor yet a bonnet; indeed, it is not a hat at all, but with the hair—an evening coiffure. It is a brilliant combination of the genius of Jeanne Duc, along steel faceted paillettes, and loops of black tulle as straight and transparent as the truth

SMART FASHIONS FOR LIMITED INCOMES

The Holidays Bring an Increase in Dinners and Dances, and a Corresponding Increase in Smart Wardrobes

AS the holiday season with its gay dinners, dances, and theatre parties approaches, it is but natural for the woman who is to be an essential part of all those events to plan a new frock or even two new frocks. The frocks that she will find most useful and appropriate for this season are a simple evening dress and what may be called a semi-evening dress, which is one that may be worn in the afternoon at a formal tea or reception or in the evening for a dinner in a restaurant.

An evening frock and a restaurant frock are sketched on this page. They have the three virtues of being simple, inexpensive, and easy to make at home. Tulle or silk net, which still holds its own in some of the most recent gowns from Paris, may be used to advantage in models such as these. The evening frock sketched at the upper right would be charming made of silk net of platinum gray and pale lilac, over a foundation of silver cloth. The low bodice, which is cut just the same in back as in front, is of silver cloth filled in with the two shades of silk net. On each shoulder is a round ornament of rhinestones. The straight skirt is of lilac silk net, through which shines the silver cloth underskirt. There are two overskirts, the upper of platinum gray net and the lower of lilac net, both are picot-edged and both are cut in two deep points, in back and in front.

A dress of many missions is the one sketched at the upper left. It may be an afternoon dress, an informal dinner or theatre dress, or a restaurant dress. The foundation is a straight slip of bronze cloth or bronze satin, veiled in wood colored tulle. The long full sleeves are of picot-edged tulle of the same color, and the narrow belt is of bronze satin or cloth. The skirt is in three parts. The topmost one, which is of tulle, is shirred at the waist and finished with a fluted tulle ruffle. The second skirt is of bronze satin or cloth bordered with a bias band of the material, and the lowest skirt is of tulle. A large hat of bronze panne velvet would be particularly smart with this costume.

A simple wrap, which could easily be copied by the seamstress at home, is here sketched at the lower left of this page. It hangs straight with the fulness shirred at the shoulders. It would be charming in deep purple brocaded satin, lined with plain satin to match. The ruffles are of wide purple velvet ribbon, and the wrap is trimmed with bands of blue fox. The front of the wrap is like the back.

(Above) Dr. Jekyll himself never exhibited more contrasting personalities than does this Doucet evening gown of sky blue taffeta brocaded in silver: in back it is dignified and slender and trained; in front it is frivolously short and scalloped and draped into a soft loop below the silver cloth girdle. The waist is just a piece of silver lace falling in long points over the arms

FOR THE SUNNY SOUTH

If One Studies In Detail the Sports Costumes of This Winter, One May Predict the Sports Costumes of Next Spring

WATCH the sports clothes of this winter if you would learn what the sports clothes of next spring are to be,—that is one of the most recently discovered laws in the science of dress.

If one pores over these sports clothes, which were designed to spend the winter in the south, one finds that, from all indications, we are to have a pale spring. Even though our conservative souls may yearn for the dark blue of yore, if we would be smart—and, of course, we would be—we shall surround ourselves with costumes of every delicate tint,—robin's-egg blue, Nile green, orchid, lilac, pale rose, and oyster white.

We are going to do as Paris has done before us and devote ourselves to jersey.

The wool jersey cloth of next spring is to be heavier than that of yesteryear, but it is jersey cloth, just the same. They say it is going to be more popular than ever. Really, though, that seems almost impossible.

There is a new sort of satin—one says “sports satin,” when one asks for it at the counter—that is going to be an essential of any and every sport. Seen from the top, it is a high-lustre satin; the under side is a practical cotton material. If one feels that one really must have a sports costume of this satin (and it's one of the smartest feelings one could possibly have), any of the costumes on this page may be copied in that material, in any of the smart pastel shades, newly arrived in popularity.

MODELS FROM WANAMAKER

(Right) A suit of jersey silk, of a pale tone of olive green, is collared and cuffed with a great deal of skunk. Two skunk buttons fasten the coat at the top, and the work of fastening is completed by a narrow strip of silk, running through slits in each side of the belt. When one says the skirt is straight, rather full, and belted narrowly, its history is told

(Left) All sorts of things go on behind the back of this motor coat of Nile green wool jersey cloth. The shawl collar can turn into a hood, when one feels that a hood is really necessary, and it continues into long ends that tie in back. Just think of the color scheme—the collar and its sash are of royal purple velvet and points of the velvet emphasize pockets

The YOUNGER GENERATION

Navy blue serge for school wear; that's like one of those fundamental principles which we never could remember in geometry. Perhaps because she is sixteen hers is a one-piece serge dress with variations, for its navy blueness is cheered by trimmings of brick red flannel and collars and cuffs of white linen

MODELS FROM MISS STICKNEY

(Above) It is a pleasant thing to discover that there are still frocks like this one in the world; a frock of plain white net made to match all the innocence of sixteen years. A lace insert at the neck, a profusion of tiny ruffles, a satin girdle in pink and blue, what more is needed!

(Left) At the age of twelve, as at the age of two times twelve, supreme happiness may be materialized in a new party frock. The most ordinary party would be glorified if one went in this frock of Elsie blue pongee, which is trimmed with a brown velvet ribbon belt and bands of skunk

(Right) One may be only sixteen but that's no reason why one's one-piece afternoon frock of turquoise blue pongee shouldn't follow the new lines. And it does, it follows them through the long-waisted effect and down the straight fulness of the skirt. Rows of white stitching trim the white satin collar and cuffs

Between fourteen and sixteen one has to endure all sorts of reflections on one's age, of which "awkward" and "difficult" are mild terms. But there are compensations such as this suit of dark green velours, which is trimmed with Hudson seal and innumerable rows of stitching in green silk

The YOUNGER GENERATION

The gossips who once said that Paris never dresses her children sensibly did not know this little girl frock of marine blue serge, a very combination of Anglo-Saxon common sense and French chic, as represented by the steel buttons and the blue, white, and black ribbon

(Above) "Un peu, beaucoup,"—loves me little,—loves me much,—that is what Margaine Lacroix christens this combination of white satin and white dotted tulle. The reason is all over the dress and in her hair, those marguerites of France, which are the field daisies of North America

If she sees the breath of a cloud in the sky, she murmurs the French equivalent for the rain to go away and come again another day when she isn't sumptuously attired in her very best coat of rose brocade which is warmly banded with gray rabbit on sleeves and close collar (Left) When parents disagree as to the useful and the ornamental in the clothes of the younger generation it is never about an unquestionable frock like this one. The first quality is in the green gabardine and the second is in the green embroidery and the lynx bands

(Right) Speaking of self-possession, the children of to-day, at least the French children, can teach it to their elders. Even the possession of this very new coat of marron woolen tissue does not excite Mimi, though it is trimmed with black and white fur and gold embroidery

ONE of the most acceptable gifts a woman can make to other feminine members of her family is a charming negligée or a fine piece of underwear; therefore many shops bring forth their loveliest lingerie for the holiday season. Illustrated at the bottom of this page are two negligées, both of which are quite new in design and delicately fine in materials and workmanship; and as in the case of all the underwear and negligées shown in this article, the prices are suited to the moderate pocket-book.

The negligée at the right in the sketch below is sufficiently formal to be worn at the tea-hour; in fact, it is almost like a soft delicate frock. The skirt is made of flesh colored chiffon cloth, pink, white, or blue, of an excellent quality, trimmed with wide tucks in the chiffon and with flounces of a very delicate cream net lace. The chiffon cloth bodice has wide sleeves of the lace held with French roses; French roses, also, dot the skirt.

The soft belt is of pink satin.

At the left in the same sketch is shown a simpler negligée, of crêpe de Chine and an exceptionally fine cream net lace. A charming bolero effect is given the negligée by the lower flounce of lace on the bodice, from under which, at the back, a pale blue ribbon comes to tie in front. This negligée also may be had in pink, blue, or white.

Many women now favor the negligée in two pieces, petticoat and long coat, like that at the upper left. One may purchase coat or petticoat separately, but they are made to be used together; the negligée is cut away a trifle in the front to show the ruffles of the petticoat. It is made of crêpe de Chine, in blue, pink, or white, and is trimmed with a cream thread lace. The knife-plaited ruffle on the petticoat is of chiffon and lace, while a broad satin ribbon holds the negligée in at the waist-line and trims the petticoat in an odd smart fashion in the center front as shown, and at the back.

Woman's mind is indeed divided—witness here the divided negligée, part coat, part petticoat. Crêpe de Chine and thread lace are the raw materials of the exquisitely finished product; coat, $11.75; skirt, $9.75

Your friend would like it, for you like it, this dainty petticoat of satin, lace, and chiffon, and that is the way to treat about a Christmas present. The underbodice is also of satin and chiffon. Petticoat, $4.95; bodice, $2.50

(Right) This negligée is a gift any woman would be charmed to have any other woman give her. It is of crêpe de Chine and net lace, with bodice in a charming bolero effect; $16.50

Illustrated at the lower right on this page is a negligée which is one of the best values of this season. While it gives the effect of a slip with a coat worn over it, it is really made in one piece. The slip portion is of flesh colored crêpe de Chine topped with a broad band of satin ribbon trimmed with wreaths of French roses, and the coat is of flesh colored chiffon cloth edged with a wide cream colored net lace. Soft ruches of the chiffon outline the neck becomingly. This negligée comes in blue or white.

PETTICOATS AND THEIR ILK

The petticoat shown at the lower left is also of washable satin for this material is perhaps the most suitable of all materials for evening petticoats. This one

If one wishes to endear herself permanently to her dearest friend, let her give that friend this unusually lovely nightgown made of fine batiste trimmed most daintily with filet; $13.75

If any woman ever had too many dainty camisoles, she deserves to be cut off Christmas lists; but it's an impossible idea, isn't it? This is of satin, thread lace, and a French rose; $2.00

(Right, below) Not the least merit of this charming negligée, of crêpe de Chine chiffon cloth, and ribbon, is its price, one particularly agreeable to the Christmas shopper with other things to buy; $10.75

(Left) If one has not the heart to part with this satin and chiffon cloth and lace petticoat, for a gift, it commends itself well to permanent ownership. The underbodice is of the same materials, and has the same appeal. Petticoat, $3.95; bodice, $2.95

(Left) Other materials for nightgowns may come, other materials will go, but the crêpe de Chine nightgown is a "stayer." This one has a top of Georgette crêpe and net lace; $7.95

has a flounce of chiffon cloth held in by shirring at the top and edged with net lace. A bow of satin ribbon held by French roses is the only other trimming. An underbodice of the satin is shown with this petticoat; it is headed with a similar lace with a pretty trimming of ribbon and of French roses. Both of the petticoats described are exceptional, because of their style, materials, workmanship, and (very important) their price.

FOR THE GIFT OF UNDERWEAR

One of the loveliest things in the way of underwear for a gift is the "set" illustrated at the upper left. Both nightgown and chemise are made of the finest of batiste trimmed with real filet lace. A four-inch insertion of real filet of a very fine quality encircles the high waistline, and a narrow filet edging trims the neck and armholes of the gown and the top and bottom of the envelope chemise.

PARIS BRINGS THESE THINGS UPON ITS HEAD

Now and Then the Parisienne Lays Aside Her Jewels Just for the Fun of Ornamenting Her Coiffure with Beads and Bandeaux

In Paris they are doing things like this to themselves. They bind their hair with a silver band dotted with blue enameled lotus flowers and hang from it blue tulle weighted with silver pendants

It is really shameful to blame Eve for everything. I have always suspected that sly Adam dared her to steal an apple from the fateful tree, and poor little Eve stole it to please Adam. That is the whole story.

So, to-day, every daughter of Eve adorns herself with jewels, not because she loves them, but to please Adam. The fact that Adam usually pays has nothing to do with the matter. First and last it is his fault. Besides, in those far-off days when jewelry first became the fashion, it was Adam who wore the lion's share. Collars and bracelets, rings and fibulae dating from the age of bronze, bear witness to his vanity. And finally Eve, her heart filled with envy, borrowed a leaf from Adam's book of tricks and afterwards managed to secure some of the pretty baubles for herself.

We are all familiar with the specimens preserved in the museums,—the classic ornaments of wrought gold and curiously set stones, which adorned the women of old Tyre and the heroines of ancient history, the necklaces, clasps, and buckles, the earrings and anklets, the bracelets and the rings that serve as models, in many instances, for the jewelry of to-day.

THE JEWELS OF THE DIM PAST

The wearing of jewelry was universal. The bearded warriors who stride in stately fashion through the bas-reliefs of Nineveh and the old cities of Assyria wear bracelets on their over-developed arms. Bowmen and charioteers alike are thus adorned. Even the rude slave is pictured with a collar,—his badge of servitude. Aside from the jeweled insignia of royalty, a glance at Egyptian picture-writing reveals any number of necklets, amu-

The thing to wear over one's latest idiosyncrasy in negligees is a head-dress of green crystal beads and green crystal pendants

"Anything so long as it's picturesque," is the verdict of Paris in regard to its ornaments, this season. And these are the clever results of that verdict

If one should happen to feel like looking this way, some evening, the way to do it is to string pearl beads close together on wire

Over in Paris there are some people to whom the evening is not complete without brushed-back locks, a silver bandeau studded with blue stones, and a blue stone dangling over their very noses lets, and bracelets on the pictured personages. And many of these exquisitely wrought ornaments of gold have been rescued from rock tombs and other burial-places and preserved for the edification of future generations.

RESURRECTED JEWELS

It was the custom in those days to place the jewels or other small objects to which a dead person had been attached in life, in the tomb with his body; but the sorrowing relatives, actuated by a nice sense of economy, often had the jewels of the dead copied in metal, and it was the copy instead of the original which was consigned to the darkness of the tomb; so that the "mortuary" jewels are apt to be rather unsatisfactory as specimens of the jewels of the time.

The fashion of interring jewels with their late owner was not confined to the countries of the East. The tombs of Scandinavia, as well, have yielded many relics of gold, silver, and bronze, some of them of remarkable workmanship. All Ireland resounds with tales of fairy gold, and charms without number have been invented for locating it; and this fairy gold is nothing more nor less than the golden torques and bracelets, the girdles and amulets which were worn by the Irish chieftains in the days of Brian Boru. Collars of massive gold, fibulae and armlets are found, not in tombs, but where the wearers must have fallen in battle,—buried deep in bogs and hidden in the earth in the neighborhood of the meeting-places of the old kings of Ireland. Ornaments of bronze, gold, and silver exist in profusion, but the handling of precious stones was not well understood by the ancients. Sardonyx, cornaline, amethysts.

The Most Fitting Way of Celebrating the
to Serve the Dishes Sanctioned by Time

REMEMBER your chairs, my dears," said a veritable grande dame, who has dispensed hospitality to the beaux and belles of several decades on both sides of the water. "The viands have their place in the meal, it is true, but they are not really of the importance that the inexperienced hostess thinks. It is much easier to fill the dishes with food that will tempt the palate, than the chairs, with what will satisfy the mind. If your chairs are well filled, your dinner will be a success."

Though authorities differ about the ideal Christmas dinner, their menus are excellent and each is suited to a different need. For the average home, the country over, no better menu than the following could be recommended.

Consommé
Olives Celery Salted Pecans Bread Sticks
Roasted Goose with Potato Stuffing
Duchess Potatoes

One should prepare for the Christmas dinner by getting this Sheraton carving set; plated silver; $10. Another useful addition is the English salad set, as the spoon and fork may also be used for the chafing dish; plated silver; $4.60

Approved by innumerable Christmas dinners is the centerpiece of fruit. Nothing could sustain it more effectively than this silver fruit bowl in a chased and pierced design; a reproduction of Dutch silver, gray finish, 10 in. long; $35

Cream of Lima Beans
Chicken Croquettes with Peas
Hearts of Lettuce, Cheese Straws
English Plum Pudding with Brandy Sauce
Frozen Pudding Assorted Cake
Bonbons Biscuits and Cheese
Coffee

One well-known authority—needless to say a descendant from an old colonial family—gives the following menu which is always followed in her home at Christmas:

Clam Broth in Cups
Stuffed Celery Olives
Salted Almonds
Roasted Goose with Chestnut

Apple Sauce
Potato Croquettes
Boiled Onions in Cream
Grape Jelly Mashed Turnips
Waldorf Salad
Mince Pie Pumpkin Pie
English Plum Pudding

Those who dine in a hotel or restaurant at Christmas are legion, and an acceptable substitute for a home dinner may easily be arranged by consulting with the maitre d'hôtel. Escoffier, the great chef, gives a menu for a Christmas dinner as served in London, at the Carlton Hotel, last Christmas. It is given here:

WHEN "Her Husband's Wife," by A. E. Thomas, was produced this fall in London, with a cast including Irene Vanbrugh, Marie Löhr, Dion Boucicault, and Allan Aynesworth, it was greeted with enthusiasm by the British press and rated by many of the critics as a minor masterpiece of comedy. But there was one note which kept recurring in these criticisms that deserves particular attention on this side of the Atlantic. "Despite the fact"—one writer stated—"that the author is American, the piece is written in the best of taste;" and another commentator said, "We are surprised to learn that the writer of this gentlemanly comedy is an American." Those are not the exact words; but they convey, at least, the sentiments expressed.

This sort of criticism overseas might merely lead us to reread with aggravated relish that famous essay of James Russell Lowell's—"On a Certain Condescension in Foreigners"; but perhaps it would be more patriotic on our part to admit—among ourselves, at least—that the implied impeachment of our manners is to a great extent deserved. Too many of our plays, and particularly of those American plays that are produced in London, appear to have been written by authors who have never been to college and have never seen the inside of a drawing-room. They have studied life in Times Square and studied manners in the Knickerbocker Grill. Too few of our plays are written about gentlemen and ladies by men who have been familiar with the fine conventions since their early childhood. It would do us no good to deny this: it is best for us to face the facts. In consequence, our drama is especially deficient in the department of High Comedy.

Mr. A. E. Thomas has written some rather good plays and some rather bad ones; on the inventive and constructive side, he is excelled by several of our other playwrights, and he has never written a piece that has revealed a high degree of elementary dramatic power; but he has done his work like a gentleman, and, though this is a matter that seems a little embarrassing to mention, it is a point that requires serious consideration from all of us who care about the future of the drama in America. The most obvious gift of Mr. A. E. Thomas is a talent for writing humorous dialogue; but his humor is the humor of the drawing-room and not the humor of the side-walk. His writing is not "literary," in the dull, derogatory sense; but it indicates a clear acquaintance with the world of literature. Mr. Thomas can manage to be American without writing entirely in slang. Harvard may have impeded the career of Mr. Percy Mackaye, because he has never quite been able to forget the library; but it was not for nothing that Mr. Thomas became a Master of Arts and taught English for a while at Brown. When he asks us to laugh, he extends the invitation in the English language; and this, of course, was what surprised the Englishmen when "Her Husband's Wife" was launched in London. They had been led to believe that we were merely a nation of barbarians, poking fun forever at each other in the foreign language of Times Square.

[Note: Here, with all its misplaced commas on its head and all its charming insouciance as to the separateness of French and English, is a letter from Madame Guilbert; we just haven't the heart to put in neat little punctuation marks and we'll annihilate the printer who changes that middle aged music.]

Dear Vogue friend

Now at last I do those things I have so long planned for. I have my classes in New York, and my lectures, and my songs,—and my dear pupils!

1st Before I go to California in January, I give recitals: Matinées Parisiennes each Friday, and some afternoons. Veillées Françaises every Sunday evening. Every Saturday I have a class to demonstrate how to sing songs or recite. I show how simple it is to have talent, génie—et le reste!

For my performances a great deal of new things are given with my repertoire of last winter. I will be helped by M. Jean Beck, professor of French literature at Bryn Mawr college, and M. Clayton Hamilton, lecturer at Columbia University. Do you know there is 10 years I am looking for Monsieur Jean Beck? And what a surprise for me when, going to sing at Bryn Mawr college, he wrote me he was looking to make my acquaintance since many years!!! God is good . . . if the world is large—and at last I have made the acquaintance of the most savant man known, for the transcription of the oldest manuscripts of musique since the music is written!! You can imagine my joy! I knew him by his colossal works in middle aged music and now we work together like two troubadours! M. Clayton Hamilton with his talented spirit presentera des poëtes. And I present few charming pupils of mine who will sing in French! Well there is a lot of good news, dear friend, and please excuse those long pages! Knowing your heart is good I have abused of you!

That's life!

Quite yours, Yvette.

latest play by Mr. A. E. Thomas, affords an evening of delightful entertainment. It is not a very good play. The exposition is too elaborate and too laborious; the second act lacks structure and fails, in consequence, to climb up to a climax; and the fabric, as a whole, is almost perilously thin. The story—which was borrowed from a novel of the same name by Mrs. Alice Duer Miller—would have been employed by nearly any other of our playwrights as the basis of a noisy farce, enlivened with alarums and excursions and the banging of innumerable doors; but Mr. Thomas, by careful writing, has developed the preposterous but rather charming project into a sentimental comedy. In doing this, he has sacrificed many obvious effects which might have been secured by a slap-dash treatment of the story on a lower plane of humor, but he has succeeded in writing a text which, though a little undramatic, appeals to people who enjoy an exhibition of good manners.

The story of "Come Out of the Kitchen" is both artificial and traditional. The Daingerfields of Virginia are one of those aristocratic Southern families that were impoverished in 1864. The father, who is dangerously ill, has been taken by the mother all the way to Austria to be operated on by a famous surgeon; and the pathos of the piece is afforded mainly by the coming of successive cablegrams from Carlsbad to the children who are left at home. These children—two daughters and two sons—are exceedingly hard-up; and, to stave off sheer starvation, they have rented the old mansion for the hunting season to a Yankee millionaire. One of the conditions of the lease is that the negro dependents of the old estate shall be dismissed and their places taken by a full complement of white servants. At the last moment, the expected white servants fail to arrive, and the four young Daingerfields—to save the lease—decide to impersonate them. Olivia Daingerfield becomes the cook, Elizabeth the housemaid; the elder brother assumes the part of the butler, and the younger son becomes the boots.

Thus, when the Yankee millionaire arrives, with a house-party of guests, he finds the heroine in the situation made classical in "She Stoops to Conquer." The second act, which is set in the kitchen, is arranged processionally; and all the loose men of the piece happen in successively to make love to the quite unusually lovely cook. In the last act, Olivia comes out of the kitchen, and finally gives her hand and heart to the Yankee millionaire,—a charming fellow who, some moments past, has discovered her identity.

This is the sort of play that could be made to seem intolerable by a bad performance; but it is very beautifully acted by a cast that has been chosen most judiciously by Mr. Henry Miller. There is a dinner scene in the last act which is the best directed episode of this quite customary kind that has ever yet been witnessed by the present writer. Only the well-remembered dinner in "Shore Acres," many, many years ago, could be, by any effort of the backward-looking mind, compared with it. The dialogue, in this impressive scene, springs spontaneously from the characters; and the entire episode must be recorded as a little masterpiece of comedy. Lovely also, both in writing and in acting, is the final scene between the hero and the heroine, when Miss Ruth Chatterton and Mr. Bruce McRae drift by exquisite degrees toward that ultimate embrace which affords the proper ending to a sentimental comedy. But perhaps the most artistic contribution to the entire undertaking is the masterly stage-direction of Mr. Henry Miller. Not only has he cast the play judiciously, not only has he worked out many touching bits of business in exquisite detail, but he has set all three of the acts in such a way that the public must applaud him as an artist and a gentleman. A great old southern mansion, both above stairs and below, is made to live before delighted eyes in all its truth and beauty. It would be a good thing for the drama in America if all our other managers would go to see these sets and learn from them a sadly needed lesson in good taste.

"THE MUSIC MASTER"

Somewhere beneath the surging of the Irish Sea, the bones of Charles Klein are rotting in oblivion, and very few among the millions who are making money in America seem any more to care; but something of the soul of this murdered and forgotten playwright still goes marching on. The best that any man has seen of truth and beauty is a thing—though little in itself—that is too great to kill. It is merely because of this miracle, so trivial and yet so irresistibly enormous, that those of us who now and then are artists can laugh at Emperors who pat God on the head and Presidents who are too proud to fight. Let them launch torpedoes or turn their backs and run away: our Living Words march on.

"The Music Master," by the late Charles Klein, was never a good play; but it is just as nearly good to-day as it was twelve years ago, when it was first disclosed to an enthusiastic public. The second act is very bad, for it has to bear the burden of a story that is exceedingly far-fetched and obviously artificial; but, in the first act and the third, there are many moments of undeniable truth and beauty. The piece is very nicely suited to the methods of Mr. David Warfield, who, within certain rather narrow limitations, is a very great actor of the modern school. He will never have a better part for the exhibition of his quiet mastery of the gentle sort of humor that is mystically deepened by the toning of a tear; and it will always be a pleasant privilege to see him in "The Music Master" once again.

THE YALE PAGEANT

Even to a disinterested observer, the Yale Pageant, which was presented in the Yale Bowl on Saturday afternoon, October 21, seemed much less tedious than most open-air performances and was in many ways exceedingly impressive. In the first place, it excited admiration because of its enormous magnitude. No less than eight thousand actors were engaged in the performance, and no less than thirty-five thousand spectators witnessed the production. It was apparent that most of New Haven and most of living Yale had turned out to participate in this commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the removal of the infant college from Saybrook to its present seat.

The pageant came as the culmination of more than half a year of organized collaboration, under the general direction of Mr. Francis Hartman Markoe. The director had prepared a scenario of sixteen incidents illustrative of certain high points in the history of Yale; and the composition of these sixteen episodes had been assigned to as many different authors. The full text of all these contributions has been published in the Book of the Yale Pageant; but, in the actual production, it was deemed desirable to delete nearly all the written lines and to perform the episodes, as completely as possible, in pantomime. Mr. Markoe should be very highly praised for this decision. Nothing is more distressing to an open-air audience than a conscious effort to listen to lines that cannot possibly be heard. A pageant of this sort should always be contrived to tell its story to the eye; and it was mainly on account of the recognition of this principle that the Yale Pageant surpassed, in its appeal to the congregated crowd, the potency of such a spectacle as Mr. Percy Mackaye's too literary masque of "Caliban."

The evolution of the episodes was accompanied by music contributed by such distinguished composers as Horatio Parker, David Stanley Smith, Seth Daniels Bingham, and William Edwin

All theatrical roads lead to Broadway. That's why Estelle Winwood, known for several seasons to European theatregoers, has become the modern young mother in "Hush!"

Haesche. Much might be written in praise of the colors of the costumes, for which Miss Christine Herter was in the main responsible; but the esthetic value of the Yale Pageant as a whole may perhaps be suggested most emphatically by a description of its two most moving moments. The first of these resulted from the interpretation of an imaginative idea conceived, apparently, by Mr. Markoe. The intention was to show, as the first interlude of the performance, an allegory of the passing of the arts and sciences across the Atlantic from the old world to the new, to lay their offerings at the feet of the infant college. To show this allegory, it was necessary first to make the public easily imagine the illimitable ocean; and this necessity was met supremely. At a concerted signal, more than a thousand little girls, recruited from the school-children of New Haven, appeared at the topmost rim of the enormous Bowl, dressed becomingly in costumes of green and blue with an undertone of purple, and proceeded to spill down by thirty stairways, like thirty rivulets seeking gladly a central and receiving sea. From thirty different directions these countless children were poured down irresistibly into the Bowl, until they seemed to fill it, and to make it rhythmically restless with the surging and the waving of their myriad arms.

The second great moment of the Pageant occurred without forethought, and was all the greater because it merely happened. There was an episode, prepared by Edwin Oviatt, to summarize the surrender, with military honors, of the body of Theodore Winthrop—a Yale graduate and the first northern officer to fall in battle in the Civil War—by the Confederate troops to the Union army.

It happened, by some falling-out of destiny, that the technical task of representing the Union Army in this episode was intrusted to the surviving members of the Department of Connecticut of the Grand Army of the Republic. Every one of these men in blue had actually seen service in that great contention which had cost this country the life of Major Winthrop and of many others like him. Their steps were slow and halting, for all of them were very old. The director, in his purple box, became impatient at their tardy tempo; he gesticulated wildly, in a rash attempt to hurry them and get them off the scene; but they took their time, and quite unconsciously achieved the triumph of the day. For, as they proceeded to march out, with arms reversed, the miracle became electrically manifest. Thirty-five thousand people, men, women, and children,—rose spontaneously to their feet; fifteen thousand hats were immediately doffed; and two hundred veterans of the great contention of half a century ago evoked a welling-up of tears in seventy thousand eyes. All of them were very old,—these men who had been young when youth was needed in the land. Their steps were tottering; but they still remembered how to march. And their faces, as they stepped out slowly through the northern portal, were very very wonderful to look upon. Such faces are no longer seen, en masse, in this country that used to be America.

They were remembered from that distant time before these States became a dumping-ground and melting-pot for all the dregs of Europe. The living past walked vivid to the eye of a present not—thank God!—grown utterly oblivious.

"INTOLERANCE"

The moving-picture manifestly offers a medium for art; but thus far—in America at least—this medium has not been used artistically. Art is the expression of ideas in terms of truth and beauty; and the millions of people who patronize our moving-pictures every year are not rewarded by the reception of ideas.

Once or twice a season, it appears to be the duty of a devotee of art to attend some particularly celebrated moving-picture, if only to find out whether the latest highly-heralded scenario is still as stupid as its countless predecessors. The sad fact must be recorded that it always is. The trouble with our moving-picture magnates seems to be that they devote all of their attention to the improvement of the mechanical side of the craft and none at all to the improvement of the imaginative side. They build a city and burn it down; and this feat is recorded by a marvel of photography. But they fail to see that there are more important and more interesting things in life than the burning of a fabricated city. To improve the art, they should spend less money on mechanics and more money on brains. What they need is not photographers but authors. They should hire such men as Maurice Maeterlinck and J. M. Barrie to invent new stories for them, as touching and as true as "The Blue Bird" or "Peter Pan." The essence of this art is narrative; and the moving-picture will never be an art so long as it contents itself with ten-twenty-and-thirty-cent scenarios. You cannot make a Maeterlinck out of a Theodore Kremer by any process of photography.

"Intolerance," by D. W. Griffith, the most famous of all moving-picture impresarios, is not a work of art, because the narrative is meaningless and incoherent. It was Mr. Griffith's purpose to insist that all the woes of the world

Lopckova and the Russian Ballet were almost synonymous terms, last season; and they are equally so this season. This is the costume and the attitude which she wears in "Le Spectre de la Rose." At Present, the World of Music Revolves around the Ballet Russe and the Concert Artists

By HIRAM KELLY MODERWELL

FROM the distant past have come the stories for the Russian Ballet. When Fokine, Bakst, and Diaghileff looked about for material with which to revitalize their art, they went not to stories which are so new that they may divert some people, but to tales so old that they are sure to divert all. When two or three are gathered together gossip and small talk have the floor. But when a thousand or five thousand people are assembled in an opera house, the matter for discussion must be of grand proportions. It must be of common interest to thousands. Only what has been sifted through many mouths can stand the test of the crowd. It is the legends and fairy-tales which have furnished the themes of great literature. Out of these have come the thirty-eight plots which Schiller said "are all there are in the world." Brunhilde being awakened to love with a kiss, honest Jack slaying the giants beyond the top of the beanstalk, Cinderella triumphing over the elder sisters,—no other stories are so fresh and diverting as these. A story is not worth the telling until it has been told a thousand times.

TILL EULENSPIEGEL

So the directors and artists of the Ballet, seeking to move people en masse, followed not only wisdom but necessity in choosing their stories from legend. They opened their second season in New York with still another fairy-tale. "Sadko" was not the "novelty" promised for the opening. But Nijinsky, in his temperamental way, acquired a sprained ankle during one of the rehearsals of "Till Eulenspiegel," announced a change of dates and repertory, and seized the opportunity to alter and improve "Till" to his heart's content. "Sadko," the substitute "novelty," had its first performance in Europe some three seasons ago.

The tale was taken from the Novgorod cycle of legends. Now Novgorod was no ancient and sacred city, like Moscow, but an upstart. It was on the paths of trade and was growing rich in the mean arts of commerce and industry. It was despised among cities, especially by ancient and learned Kieff. The upstart had ambitions; it longed for culture, and it wished to have its name associated with the arts, exactly like any modern member of the nouveaux riches. It was a grimy Pittsburgh laying claim to the prestige of Boston. So the ruling merchant class of Novgorod commissioned Sadko, a young poet, to create a legend about their native city. This he did so well that he became a local hero and soon passed into the legend himself.

AS THE BALLET DANCES SADKO

In this legend, as the Russian Ballet dances it, Sadko is shipwrecked and goes to the bottom of the ocean. Here he finds strange and marvelous things,—galloping sea-horses, undulating jellyfish, and wriggling creatures of all kinds which swim in and out through a sea-green forest where the Tsar of the Ocean holds his court. Sadko is only for a moment surprised. He is no chivalric minstrel, but an adventurer. He walks calmly into the most impossible situations and takes charge of them. A few twangs on his rude harp, and the whole court is dancing madly, for the strains are magical. But Sadko, who is always looking ahead, is indifferent to the esthetic effect he has created, and while the court is helplessly dancing he makes love to the daughter of the Tsar of the Ocean and sails away with her on a conch shell. Through it all the spectator can almost hear the burghers of Novgorod exclaiming, "You see, this is our poet. Novgorod is so mighty in the arts that her sons can make even the kingdom of the seas obey their will." It is a pretty tit-for-tat; Sadko immortalizes Novgorod, and Novgorod in return immortalizes Sadko.

This tale was mimed splendidly by the ensemble which Waslav Nijinsky trained. The stage, hazy green with the imaginative scenery and lighting designed by Natalie Gontcharova, was filled with uncanny creatures. Fins and tentacles writhed and coiled. The picture was fairly crawling with undulating lines that had neither beginning nor end. Much of this effect came from the costuming, but more came from the expert ensemble of dancers. It was a pretty example of purely artistic means turned to pictorial ends. And still more of the effect came from the vitalizing influence of centuries on the Sadko legend. Modern imagination could hardly invent so lively a place. Jules Verne made the deep ocean a laboratory; the unknown author of "Sadko" made it a romance.

The Russian Ballet opened the second week of its season with "Till Eulenspiegel," a work never before performed. This elaborate pantomime was taken from an old German folk-tale and danced to the music of Richard Strauss's well-known symphonic poem. The story tells of the pranks which Till, a beggar and a thief, practiced upon the rich and respectable citizens of Brunswick. The brilliant scenery and costumes were designed by Robert Edmond Jones, a young American artist, now at the head of his profession. The setting showed an old cathedral, dark and ponderous, surrounded by the crazy crooked houses of an old medieval town, and the costumes were humorous exaggerations of medieval fashions. One noble lady, for example, wore a head-dress fully six feet high and a train twenty feet long. The story shows Till as a street urchin, as a cavalier, as a doctor, and as a priest, and the parts were mimed with infinite zest and superb technique by Nijinsky. But all this showed but half of his genius, for all the work of the individual pantomimes, as well as the choral dancing, was done under his direction. "Till Eulenspiegel" is not a ballet, but an exquisite satirical pantomime play. The Russian Ballet has done nothing like it before; beyond a doubt it will take its place beside "Scheherazade" and "Prince Igor" as one of the most popular pieces in its repertory.

THE DISCIPLINE OF NIJINSKY

It is not new to say that the Russian Ballet contains an aggregate of technical ability which can not be equalled elsewhere the world over. But it is new to say that this ensemble has been whipped into something like its true form by the energizing and disciplining rehearsals of Nijinsky. When the Ballet first came to New York, the judicious were none too generous with praise. Whether because of the lack of Fokine's drilling, or because of the ocean trip which every Russian fears like a ghost, or because the new country seemed to them one which could not distinguish the better from the best,—for some reason the dancers of the ballet were a little ragged in their work. It was not merely the Nijinskys and the Karsavinas whom the judicious missed, but rather the directing intelligence which could perfect this art of all the arts. The work of the Ballet in Europe had been supreme; in New York it was something less. So the Ballet had only a qualified success during its first season here. With the coming of Nijinsky matters brightened. Yet Nijinsky, conscientious workman and brilliant innovator as he is, is rather an inspiration than a drill master, and a ballet company needs drill probably beyond any other group of artists in the world. Monotony of work may bring a "let-down," or some of the temperamental contretemps in which the company abounds so richly. The slightest relaxing of the tension is noticed, for American eyes are by no means stupid ones.

But the second season has started admirably. The mass work, as well as the individual, is almost as good as it was in Europe. Lydia Lopokova has brought her dainty technique close to the last degree of perfection, and Bolm is still the virile and muscular dancer of the type which the Russian Ballet added to the traditions of its art. Moreover there is a notably good orchestra, working with enthusiasm and understanding under the new conductor, M. Monteux. As it played Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Coq d'Or" music, and that of the ballets now familiar, one felt that half the enjoyment of the Ballet could be had with one's eyes shut. It is greatly to the credit of the directors that, under conditions which must have been trying, they have not allowed the musical portion of their work to deteriorate.

A BASIS FOR NATIVE COMPOSITION

Borrowing from the Russians who have sought to create a native music from the national folk-songs, certain American enthusiasts have for some years been urging the use of American Indian melodies as a basis for native composition. The most intelligent, sincere, and forceful of these apostles of nationalism was Mr. Arthur Farwell, who gave five or ten years to a fruitless effort to evoke musical genius in response to his pleadings. He raised a storm among musicians, some of whom claimed doggedly that the American Indian had no music (Continued on page 180)

Waslav Nijinsky is not only the bright particular star of the Ballet Russe, but its guiding light as well. He is directing the Ballet this season, and his skill is responsible for its present state of perfection. The Ballet was to open its season with "Till Eulenspiegel," but Nijinsky, temperamentally sprained his ankle in rehearsing

(7) This vase is of white china with gay colored birds and flowers and stripes of black enamel. A brass holder keeps the flowers in place; 6 in. high; $3

(5) There is no light so merciful as candle-light—especially the light of candles held in ivory white modern Wedgwood candlesticks; 10 in. high; $10 a pair. (6) The ivory modern Wedgwood fruit bowl is embossed with roses; 12 in. in diameter; $25

(8) A guest book is contained in a gilded wooden cover, decorated on both sides in a design of blue, gold, and red; 5¾ in. by 8 in.; $10

Photographs in this section by Bradley and Merrill

(9) The table is of walnut-finished mahogany, after a William and Mary design, and brass knobs are the handles to its drawers; 5 feet long; $58. (10) Upon the table sits a calm Buddha, of bronze, enameled in colors, on a black lacquer stand 20 inches high; $60. (11) The tall candlesticks are of solid brass; 30 inches high; $25 a pair. (12) Above them all is a mirror set in a red lacquer frame with a filigree of black lacquer at the top; 36 in. by 28 in.; $35. It may also be had in a mahogany frame; $28

(16) Right: This cabinet, lacquered black or blue and decorated in gold or gay colors, is one of a pair, one of which holds a Victrola of the $150 size and the other its records; 42½ in. high, 18 in. wide; $500 a pair. They may be purchased separately, in which case the cabinet containing the phonograph is $300, and the one containing the records is $200

(21) Above: Sconces of carved wood may be had in either gold or verd-antique finish, $4.50 a pair

(21) Above: This carved wood sconce, like its twin on the left, measures 12 inches high without the candle

(17) Above: When the sliding sides of this walnut table are extended, the table measures 56 by 24 inches; $81. (18) The lamp stand is of wrought iron; $19. (19) The gold silk shade is banded with black chenille and bordered with gold fringe; 18 inches in diameter; $18. (20) At the right of the table is a Queen Anne chair of oak-finished mahogany, with a velvet cushion; $20. Unadorned with the cushion, the chair is $16.50

(22) Above: A Chinese mirror is always a cause for pleasant reflections. This one, the top of which is evidently patterned on the time-honored model of a pagoda, is of black lacquer, with small, strange, and exceedingly amusing figures from Chinese mythology done upon it in raised lacquer; 48 inches high; $60

(24) Below: When one stops to think about it, there is always some place in the house that seems just made for the sake of a stool, one that satisfies everybody with its presence there. The thing to put in a place like that is this Jacobean stool of walnut with a down top covered in red satin; 18 inches high; $32

GIFTS OF ANTI-SUFFRAGE PERSUASION— THEIR PLACE IS IN THE HOME

(23) Left: Chairs of this design used to be made when the Stuart kings were at the height of their glory. This chair has a polychrome Pompeian decoration; $30

(27) Left: The adjustable bronze base of this floor lamp ends in a Pompeian lamp, from which hangs an electric light shaded by colored silk; 55 inches high; $100

(25) Behold a nest of mahogany tables lacquered in black on top with red lacquer legs and touches of gold. The largest table is 28 inches high; $45 complete. (26) The bowl is of paneled glass, which may be either blue or purple, and it rests on an ebony stand; 10 inches in diameter, 6½ inches high, including stand; $7.50

(28) The armchair may be had in either red or green lacquer; $12.50. (29) The nest of tables consists of three oval tables lacquered in red with gold decorations; $45; in mahogany, $37.50. (30) Three woven reed baskets, also fitting in a nest, are decorated with glass beads and Chinese tassels; largest, 8½ in. in diameter, smallest, 5½ in.; $5.50

THESE GIFTS FOR THE HOSTESS

(42) Above: A particularly pleasant way to serve a liqueur is in a decanter of red Bohemian glass, with a design of a Bohemian castle surrounded by equally Bohemian wheat done upon it in white frosted glass. The decanter is 9 in. high, and its six accompanying glasses match it in design and coloring; $18 complete

(32) A plate of amethyst glass is a picturesque background for fruit or floating flowers; 16 in. in diameter; $9

(33) Above: The compote is Venetian glass with lines of blue or green, or it may be all of amber tone; 10 in. in diameter; $18. (34) The dish is of peachblow porcelain; 5 in. in diameter; $4. (35) The bottle,—really it's a bottle—is also of peachblow porcelain; 3½ in. high; $7.50

(36) Whosoever possesses this crystal vase knows that in all the world there is none like it, for it was made by Lalique of Paris, and Lalique, like Shakespeare, never repeats; 12 in. high; $100

the soup of the epicure

always good*

"The best soup comes out of a can!"

Stated bluntly, perhaps, but the woman who said it was a user of Franco-American Soups and she wished to make her statement emphatic.

She continued: "Have your soup made at home and it is like the servant question, always a problem. One day the soup is good, the next poor. I grew tired of the uncertainty. Now I serve Franco-American Soups every day. I know the soup will be good. I have a large and delightful variety to choose from and the soup is ready in a moment's time. For this relief, much thanks!"

By way of suggestion to you in ordering from your grocer to-day: The Franco-American Tomato Soup, invigorated with pure, delicious beef stock. The Consommé, amber-clear, bland, delicately stimulating. The Chicken Soup, with a strength and richness of flavor best described as "truly Franco-American."

The Gift She is Hoping to Receive A NECKLACE OF TECLA PEARLS

The fine art of giving is to give what is wanted rather than to give what you want.

Most Christmas Gifts afford a great deal of pleasure and satisfaction—to the giver.

A Necklace of Tecla Pearls will afford an infinitude of satisfaction to the recipient.

Pearls are at once the most beautiful, the most envied, and the most prized of all jewels—and Tecla Pearls are such indistinguishable copies of Oriental pearls, that they pass for Orientals and are worn for Orientals by women of affluence and social scruples on two continents.

ANSCO

CAMERAS & SPEEDEX FILM

Watch-like in its accuracy and exceptionally beautiful in appearance is the Ansco Vest-Pocket Speedex No. 3—the distinctive gift-camera. There is no other camera like it in the world.

It is the smallest and lightest platform camera made to take $2\frac{1}{4} \times 3\frac{1}{4}$ pictures—and the only one which permits the operator to change the speed, aperture and focus without losing the picture in the finder and without moving the camera. Other exclusive features add to its unusualness.

The high grade lens and shutter equipment of the Ansco Vest-Pocket Speedex No. 3 give it ample power for taking action pictures and pictures in poor light.

PAISLEY SHAWLS ARE BACK

SHAWLS, shawls, and again shawls! The modern woman will probably call her heirloom, with its delicate revel of color, a Paisley shawl. If it really be a Paisley, she is fortunate. If it be by any chance, however, that lovely rarity, a real Indian cashmere, then is she the happiest of heirloom owners, for it would be hard to find any relic, even a jewel, at once so valuable and so beautiful as this precious piece of handiwork, reminiscent of the Empire period now influencing the mode. For we must remember that there are three distinct kinds of cashmere shawls: the real Indian cashmere, its French imitation, and the Paisley copy.

And no matter how beautiful the shawl or how longingly Dame Fashion casts her scissors eye at it, one should not commit the sacrilege of cutting a real Indian cashmere. Its French imitation or the even more beautiful Paisley may be bought, begged, or stolen, to cut up, but for the Indian shawl, it should be worn only as a scarf, as were those belonging to the "Elégantes" of the Empire.

THE GIFT OF NAPOLEON

When Napoleon came home from the French expedition to Egypt, with him came almost the first Indian shawls known to Europe. The Empress Josephine took an instant fancy to the exquisite things, and many a court lady tried—and failed—to imitate the nonchalance of the Empress's shawl as it hung loosely from her shoulders.

Before the Empire period, a Dutch official sent to his wife a beautiful Indian shawl. She, less wise in such matters than Josephine, found that it served very well to cover an ironing-board!

Not even the subtle French women were without their misunderstandings about this Indian beauty; and in 1778 one of our French great-grandmothers used hers to line a petticoat.

THE SHAWL OF EMPIRE

But the mystic Hindu had not woven a fantastic Indian soul into the delicate webs for nothing. When once fashion had accepted them, the shawls could not become too numerous; and after a time fashion outdid Napoleon, so fondly did she love the cashmere shawl. Things went so far that the Emperor began to look with disfavor on the paying of so much money for things not French. A French factory of shawls was established under the direction of Fernaux and the painter Isabey, where the Indian shawls were carefully and very successfully copied. In texture, coloring, and design, the French shawl looked like its more traveled Indian sister, but the slightest touch of the finger would reveal the imitation. It is said that when at a ball or reception any lady's shawl appeared suspiciously real, Napoleon would approach the owner. Blushing with delight she would courtesy—to her undoing; for, while her attention was thus engaged, his quick touch on the genuine Indian shawl would bring a shade of disappointment to his face, and she would see with dismay that she was found out. Even though a shawl which cost the equivalent of $400 in India would bring $2000 after its travels to Paris, it is to be feared that many a lady disappointed Napoleon by flying Indian colors. Although the importation was forbidden, Leroy, the court couturier, smuggled many a shawl in through Marseilles.

Slower than France to adopt the custom of shawls, but more perfect in their manufacture, was Scotland. The making of shawls in Paisley, Scotland, began about 1820. The Indian shawl had its real rival here in the famous Paisley copies. The Indian cashmere shawl was a combination of needle and loom-work which took two Hindus two years to finish. The Indian patchwork shawl, queen even among Indian shawls, was composed of little pieces of wonderful needlework sewn together. It was never equalled by that of any other nation.

One of the many clever uses of the Paisley shawl: Chinese cap, one-piece cape, muff, and bag are of Paisley, lined wherever possible with peacock blue corded silk, and trimmed, even to the under edge of the hat-brim, with seal; set from Bruck-Weiss

THE HARMONY OF SHAWLS

If one could possess many shawls, to harmonize with many dresses, one was so much the happier. Queen Victoria bought seventeen in one year. In buying a shawl, the eyes, hair and complexion of the fair owner-to-be were carefully considered and becoming effects were sought. But alas for the fashion of the shawl! When, as a result of the abundant home manufacture, the bourgeoisie put it on, the aristocrat put it off; and there it lay, a stuff for upholstery.

Now it has come back, to become a stuff for our admiration. It is making its appearance disguised in every possible form; its dainty yet daring quality makes a particular appeal to the feminine American, be she debutante or maiden aunt. There is only one phase of the cashmere shawl that up to the time of writing, has been overlooked—the use of it as a shawl. And any day now we may expect the sight of a modern Josephine en route to the opera, clad wholly and warmly in the shawl of her great-grandmother, the very shawl itself.

And now shall we sin with the ladies who misunderstood the value of the shawl? Shall we slash its delicate folds to combine it with inappropriate furs? Or shall we as far as possible preserve its quaintness and use it only with rich furs and discretion?

PARIS BRINGS ON ITS HEAD

and emeralds were common in those days, and these stones, crudely cut, were set in gold by the metal workers of the time. But the stones lacked brilliancy. The idea of cutting the stone into many facets to increase its lustre was not adopted until a comparatively recent date. The diamonds found in the quaint brooches which adorn the images of the saints in the old churches of Peru, for instance, are cut square with few facets, and they are much less brilliant, in consequence, than many a modern imitation stone.

Times have changed. The diamond "sunbursts," stars, hearts, and kindred trinkets which blazed unflinchingly from the corsages of the dowagers of some years ago have been, as it were, thrown into the crucible. That is, the stones have either been reset in modern fashion or—and this is no secret—have been unhesitatingly sold to increase the number of automobiles in the garage.

The new ornaments must be decorative. They must be, so to speak, in tune with their wearer, reflecting in some way her personality and her individual charm. The effort at self-expression which is torturing the modern woman is evidenced even by the ornaments she wears. The word "ornaments" is used advisedly, for some of the newest and most effective trinkets can hardly be classed as jewels in the accepted sense.

THE TIARA IS STORED AWAY

The tiara has had its day, or, rather, its evening. Nowadays few women care for the icy glitter of brilliants arranged in a set design above the brow. A dozen years are put on, as a rule, with the tiara, which ages distinctly the face underneath. In the pursuit of youth we have abandoned the tiara or at least have stored it away for state occasions. Of late the picturesque head-dress has climbed into favor. No matter how inexpensive the new head-dress may be, if it is picturesque, it is smart. One of the newest coiffures consists of a simple silver circlet to which is attached, in the back, a delicate net of silver wire; and to this silver mesh are sewed odd flat flowers of geranium red velvet. The net and flowers support a soft knot of shining black hair. The coiffure is sketched at the lower right on page 80.

Cut crystal is much used for the evening coiffure and many really beautiful effects are obtained by the use of different colored beads. Flowers of cut crystal, for instance, are chained together in some way and bound about the head, forming a very pretty head-dress. Beads of pearl or coral strung on wire, like those sketched on page 80, are also successfully employed.

Aside from the classic pearl necklace, which is always exquisite, and the superb diamond pendant on its slender chain, it is the picturesque necklet which most interests the prospective purchaser. It may be merely a plaque of jet, jade, or amethyst swinging from a silken cord, a necklet of silver and cut crystal, or a new arrangement of seed pearls and emeralds or coral beads, but it must be decorative in form and color. One very pretty necklace is made of gold set with garnets with a plaque of garnets swinging low in front.

AND AS TO EARRINGS

As to earrings, the single great pearl posed on the lobe of the ear which was so smart before the war, has given place to a pendant earring, often a perfect pearl suspended by a slender chain of diamonds. This little chain of brilliants is very smart, although any preferred stone may be substituted for the pearl. Great double hoops of black onyx swinging from a coral pink ear are very effective, and pendant emeralds, flashing green fire below their slender chains of diamonds, are no less lovely. Very odd and picturesque is an earring of carved jade and black pearls. A small black pearl enhances a rose tinted ear and swinging below is a square plaque of carved jade, green and translucent, from which falls a large black pearl, a perfect sphere of velvety texture.

Very heavy is an earring with a pear-shaped pendant of richly colored amber set in delicately wrought silver. A rather flat circular bit of amber decorates the lobe of the ear, and this earring, like the other new ones, is screwed on.

The favorite brooch, at present, is some form of the bow-knot,—not the meandering bow-knot which at once presents itself to the mind, but a conventionalized bow-knot, either squat and short or long drawn out. Diamonds and sapphires are for some reason preferred for the brooch of the moment, which is chaste in design and cool in color.

One of the loveliest diamond pendants is in the form of a snow flake of perfect glittering stones swinging from a slender chain of diamonds which passes about the neck. Another effective pendant is formed of a single great golden topaz swinging from a slender platinum chain. The smartest bracelet is a simple hoop of diamonds, and many watches, instead of being set in bracelets, are set in rings.

ENTER—THE ANKLET

The anklet is slowly creeping into favor. It is generally worn in the intimate seclusion of the boudoir, with the latest eccentricity in house gowns. It works in a circle; the anklet calls for a certain type of robe d'intérieur and the certain type of robe d'intérieur fairly shrieks aloud for the anklet. So what can the woman do, poor thing, but order both? Some of the anklets designed for indoor wear are exceedingly effective and original, with a distinctly personal note which renders them still more interesting; for the anklet, to be chic, must be designed especially for its wearer. One, very new and very, very smart, is made of pearls strung on silver wire, and just over the instep twinkles a cube of diamonds swinging from a short diamond chain. This glorified version of the "ball and chain" has appeared of late not once but several times; and the curious part of the matter is that not a jeweler in Paris will admit making it. It is quite evident that Satan himself turned jeweler and designed the ankle-bracelet. Beware of it!

What is a "tartana"? It is the dog-cart de luxe of Spain, and ours glistened with golden wood and plate glass windows, with Pancho, the pony, jet black, Pedro, the driver, like a pirate in red and yellow, and Pepi, the rear-guard, a troubadour. 'Twas thus we followed the thread of Catalan lace

IT HAPPENED LIKE THIS:

CATALAN lace is a magic lace. You have never heard of it, perhaps; well, it would be the most delightful thing in the world if you could learn about it as we did. But since you can not, may we please tell you? For we followed the thread of this magic lace on a magic journey, bobbing in and out, in and out the almost uncharted maze of tiny lace villages that lie along the wild curves of the Mediterranean—bobbing in a most peculiar, altogether Spanish vehicle with a most remarkable, altogether Spanish retinue of hangers-on. It happened like this:

IT BEGAN WITH THE WAR

In the first place our automobile was requisitioned by the French government for its war needs. We were over the French frontier at the time, at Gerona, that ancient Spanish city of topsy-turvy pink and white and sky-blue balconied buildings hung precariously over a rushing river or along dim arcaded streets that lead into sudden vistas of golden shadows. We had come thus far up the coast of Spain, promising ourselves to look into this matter of the famed but rare Catalan laces; and now, automobileless, how were we to go farther?

We reviewed the transportation situation as we lazily swayed to and fro in Spanish rocking chairs in the marble patio of our hotel. Our lace itinerary would lead us into haunts guiltless of the benefits even of the casual Spanish railway service. For Catalan lace hides itself modestly away; it is produced at the homes of the workers in a nest of almost uncharted tiny villages along the curves of the Mediterranean coast of the old Spanish province of Catalonia. Should we risk ourselves to the ambling mules of the antique stage-coaches, those picturesque chariots of discomfort with the pace of a Spanish tortoise, or should we give up the lace?

At this moment of discouragement, as we execrated for the thousandth time war and its greed for automobiles, through the great arched entrance of the hotel courtyard appeared the smartest little turnout that ever rolled on wheels to gladden two motorless wanderers' eyes. It was a tartana. And what is a tartana? It is the country dog-cart of Spain in its most de luxe form. The tiny body of this one was all graceful curves, balanced high between two great wheels, and was of a natural golden wood set with many plate glass windows and crowned over all with a glazed white leather hood. It glistened like a jewel casket. Its interior was the perfection of fine cabinet work, its upholstery as chic as that of a limousine.

To crown all, between the high springing shafts pranced a black pony of Arab breed, arrayed in nickel-trimmed white harness; and with every toss of his head there rang forth a chime of silvery bells.

The inspiration was from my companion's ingenious American mind.

"Why, let's tour in a tartana!" she cried.

We lost no time. Abetted by our landlord, we overcame what ordinarily would have been a lengthy series of mananas (to-morrows) in Spanish bargaining, and arranged with Pedro, the owner, for the use of himself, his tartana, and Pancho, the pony, for a week's trip.

Enter Pepi. Pepi was a youth in the service of the hotel, and his stately Spanish style of speech and lavish use of "Your gracious worships" when addressing us had already endeared him to us. Pepi, it seemed, was connected by every grade of kinship to endless ramifications of relatives throughout the province, all miraculously engaged in the making of Catalan lace; whereupon we attached him to our service in the capacity of courier for our tartana tour.

THE TARTANA RECEIVES US

Now a tour in a tartana through the Spanish countryside was a plunge into the unknown that might be bathless and foodless; so we took two big bags of traveling clothes, a tea-basket, a luncheon outfit, and other picnic accessories, and in a rosy dawn (for Spanish journeys are always made at the two ends of the day, to permit of the elaborate mid-day dinner and the inevitable afternoon siesta) we rocked off gaily in our cradle of a coach down the steep streets of Gerona.

Pedro easily carried off the honors of the traveling toilette of our little caravan. He handled the white ribbons of our coach arrayed in a most piratical costume. Brown velveteen trousers were laced into high white gaiters, and over all was draped a capo of scarlet and yellow edged with an elaborate ball fringe. Then about his waist was bound a flaming red sash of much length and breadth, in which were struck several long knives whose blades were adorned with such ferociously explanatory mottoes as, "I cut food and kill men," and, "'Tis I who touch the heart of thy enemy." A broad-brimmed sombrero capping a pink spotted head-kerchief completed our driver's ensemble.

The door of the tartana was at the rear, and on its step sat Pepi, as dignified and with almost as "long ago" an air as if he had emerged from a Velasquez painting. He wore a black suit with knee trousers, a tight jacket of an Eton cut, and a stiff high black hat; his sole luggage consisted of a time-mellowed guitar slung across his shoulders and an ever-present cigarette between his lips.

As we spun along through rolling vineyards, Pepi, between snatches of old Spanish melodies picked off on his guitar, undertook our lace education in the punter al cuxi, as he sonorous called Catalan lace in the Catalan tongue. For the Catalan tongue is in this corner of Spain a language as real as its lace. The lace, it seemed, was an industry of the niñas, the little children, as well as of their elders, or so Pepi declared, punctuating his music with many tales of the prowess of his apparently numberless small sisters and cousins with the lace bobbin, how they reeled off wonderful mantillas for the ladies to wear to fiestas and to mass, and in the crowded dress circle at the bull-fights. Lace making, it appeared, was the amusement of the little niñas, and their lace pillows took the place of toys and brought them (and especially their elders) quite a good little income, too. For these Catalan lace edgings and insertions, neckwear and handkerchiefs, find their way eventually into the big shops of the Spanish cities, are even imported (Pepi's eyes grew large with wonder as he told us) to Paris itself, and sail over seas to the great America del Norte, and can, Pepi added impressively, even be had in the big splendid shops of the Nueva York.

PEPI WAS RIGHT

The first length of our lace clue was quickly wound off as Pancho's silvery bells tinkled us into the tiny hill town of Casa de la Selva, the first in the series of lace villages. Here a bevy of Pepi's small cousins rapturously formed a body-guard around our tartana and followed us into the village. And indeed, Pepi was right, for each little girl carried her lace pillow with its fringe of clacking wooden bobbins thrust under her arm as she might a doll. The Catalan lace pillow is really a bolster, and many of them were quite as long as the little girls were tall and were covered with a bright colored material and gaily decorated with knots and streamers of ribbons.

Pepi presented them formally to "Their worships the gracious señoras" with the dignity of a Spanish grandee. As a prelude to purchasing, the young niñas offered us their laces as gifts, bowing and smiling and courtseying; but this was only Spanish politeness, and the customary way of honoring guests—for guests, of course, we were, having arrived in their midst under the ægis of their cousin Pepi. Pepi was, however, able at length to lead conversation diplomatically into a more commercial channel, and quite a bundle of the small lace-makers' products was stowed away in the tartana before we left. Rather simple in workmanship and patterns these were, for the best and more elaborate designs were to be found in the lace villages of the coast.

Catalan lace is like a romance, so delicate is it, so rare, so hidden

The second lap of our guiding lace thread was reeled off when we came within sight of the curling waves of the Mediterranean and saw the fan-like plumes of the palm-trees of Palamos against the opal-tinted sky of late afternoon. Palamos is the first link in the chain of tiny fishing ports of the Catalan seacoast which harbor this unique and vaguely known lace industry.

LOVELY SPAIN!

At Palamos we halted and opened our tea basket on a tinted rock that might have been made of amethysts and topazes fused together. Madeline, in spite of our battery of thermos bottles, insisted on buying water from a vender. He was a most picturesque vender, and he drove a most picturesque betasseled mule on whose back were shining huge brown pottery jars bound with colored cords and filled with this most precious liquid of all Spain.

Lovely Spain! In the afterglow, our tartana threaded its way through a maze of fishing boats painted to rival the hues of tropical birds. These were drawn up over the shady beach far on to the road and almost lost in a maze of fish nets spread spider-like across our path in all directions. Catalan fisherman stood about, and their red caps and many colored capos and sashes vied with their craft in making the sea front of Palamos a riot of color.

Pepi was rather pessimistic over the lace prospects of Palamos. Since an extensive cork-making business has invaded the neighborhood, this little town of the bobillos has lost much of its lace prestige; and, tempted with wages before undreamed of in this unsophisticated land, hundreds of the young girls have deserted their beribboned bolsters to engage in the unromantic occupation of sorting out cork discs. However, the niñas and their tongues and bobbins still run races together under the tall date palms, and lace-workers of all ages peer out at the passers-by from behind their barred windows and over their flower-garlanded balconies. The indefatigable Pepi was able to bring up some small relatives, and we were graciously permitted (after an interchange of much Spanish courtesy) to add several handkerchiefs to our lace collection.

INTO THE CITADEL OF THE INDUSTRY

Next day we were off for the group of five lace towns which form the real citadel of the Catalan lace industry. These are some thirty-five miles farther down the coast. This was quite a jaunt even for the spirited Pancho, and necessitated another start at dawn. Though Pepi assured us of wonderfully good food and miraculously low prices on our way, as a precautionary measure we had the lunch basket well stocked before we clattered out of town on our cross-country ride along the curious varieties of Spanish highways and by-paths.

Over great boulders and through great ruts, our tartana bowled with great agility; it nosed its way through apparently trailless fields, it wandered with a divination inexplicable to us up the pebbly beds of dry torrents, and forded like a duck, bridgeless streams in the eccentric course of our route. Over all was a cloud of ochre-tinted dust which the burning sun turned into a halo of gold about our heads and from which not even the glass sides of the tartana could entirely protect us.

Pepi meanwhile twanged without a break the popular air, "Coming Down from Madrid," while Pedro kept up in Spanish coachman style a running conversation with Pancho, never using reins or whip but giving the pony only encouraging words such as, "Oh, go along to the left with the Saints, oh beast," or, "Move to the right, oh creature, for the love of Ave Maria." All of these appeals Pancho obeyed as if addressed in his own language; but if he should prove obstinate, a small stone was thrown on the shining black of his back, from a pile placed for this persuasive purpose on the seat beside Pedro.

It was nearly noon before our eyes were cheered with the sight of a little yellow and brown posada, the wayside inn of Spain. It was set in a Cubist landscape at the end of a vivid yellow road with a background of pink mountains and a foreground of purple fields spotted with green blotches; thus is Nature's palette set in this southland. In the stone-paved courtyard among pomegranates, we were able to have our cold lunch supplemented with a tortilla, a curious vegetable omelette, a dish of red pimientos as warm as their coloring, a bottle of the wine of Rioja, and luscious purple figs gathered from the tree under which we made our impromptu dinner and served on one of their own great leaves.

AN INTERLUDE

While our retinue stretched out on the ground and took their siestas wrapped in their capos, we explored the cavernous depths of our inn, beyond the shadowy corners where stood truly Aladdin-sized jars holding stores of wines and olive oil. There we found a treasure,—a bit of old Catalan lace of rare design which the landlady parted with for the modest sum of ten pesetas.

The interlude in the afternoon was another gipsy tea by the roadside, during which there appeared most appropriately a band of strolling gypsies, ever present in Spain. One of them, (Continued on page 134) swarthy as a Moorish belle, danced before us to Pepi's musical accompaniment with the abandon of a Salome and much clapping of castanets and swirlings of a silken-fringed, gorgeously embroidered shawl. She scorned our offer of tea cakes, but consented to carry away a silver coin clasped between her lips for luck.

The moon was rising out of the sea as yellow as a giant orange of Valencia, when the lights of the twin lace towns of Blanes and Torderas twinkled through the olive trees, and our somewhat weary tartana caravan rolled into the primitive but comfortable fonda of the second of these Catalan fishing ports.

WHAT THE CLUE LED TO

A first glance from our balcony next morning, where we were served our breakfast of thick chocolate and sugared rolls, revealed the fact that our lace clue had served us faithfully, and had at last led us into the heart of the labyrinth of Catalan lace.

At every doorway, behind every iron grilled window, on every curving balcony were seen the lace-makers; while from up and down every narrow street came to our ears the click-clack of slim wooden bobbins as skilful fingers sent them through the forest of pins that held the lace patterns to the bolsters. We were soon out among the little lace niñas ourselves. There were bands of them running along merrily to school, each with her lace bolster tucked under one arm and her books under the other, for not only are there lace classes for instruction in this filmy art in the schools, but lace-making is the recreation of the children during recess time and the amusement of their play hours. Rarely is a young girl seen without her lace bolster. We saw groups of them sitting on the spread-out fishing nets along the beach and resting in the purple shadows thrown by the big white lateen sails of the feluccas drawn up on the sands. They propped their bolsters up against the brown sides of the boats and sang the charming airs of Catalonia as they swung their bobbins. It recalled the tradition that back in those early days of Spanish history when the women of the Saracen race brought the secrets of lace-making to the shores of Catalonia,

A Catalan belle is she, and a lace-maker. She is not a mercenary worker, nor yet a beauty, but just lovely, shy, gay, and wholly irresponsible. These are ways they wear lace in Catalonia the peculiar mesh of the Catalan lace was inspired by the weave of the fishermen's nets.

IN DOUBT, WE ASKED PEPI

We found that it required much conversational artfulness and many magnificent phrases to open a way to purchase with these independent, sunny, wilful, and proud Catalans. For these people are at all times the despair of the buyers and dealers in laces, as they will in most cases work only when the inspiration moves them (the true artistic temperament), and they are unmoved by mercenary motives and are quite apt to refuse to do business entirely if not managed with tactfulness.

But Pepi was equal to it. He discovered (or improvised) an unlimited supply of relatives, and the path was smoothed towards completing our collection of the lace of Catalonia. The

The workers in these tiny fishing villages are visited by dealers in laces who do their best to make the workers systematic. Alas! they work how they will, when they will, and measure their lace by their palms—"eight palms" is a yard. But it is these same traits that make this lace so rarely lovely Leshner, Whitman & Co., Inc.

New York City

ON the 20th of December, I went to the cottage of a colored boatman in Nassau to inquire about my boat.

"He's away, Ma'am," said his wife, putting out her head, wrapped in a cotton handkerchief of lemon yellow, which made a wonderful picture against the cottage window, for just nearby bloomed a tall and graceful tree of scarlet poinsettia, while cactus sprang out of the crevices in the wall, like weeds, and the orange trees shed fruit which no one troubled to pick up.

"Please come in," she went on, politely dusting a chair for me, and I went into the very clean shanty.

"Do you know where he's gone to?" I asked; she laughed.

"Guess he's keepin' Christmas, Ma'am," she said.

"Keeping Christmas? But this is only the twentieth!" I exclaimed.

"Y'as, but dat's all same. Dey keeps it mor'n a week sometime. I do'n keep it—"

"You didn't keep it?" I was mystified; she laughed again.

"Cos I d'on take nothing to drink, that's why. So I can't never keep Christmas—not me. But he keeps it. But I'll send an' get him for you, Ma'am."

The day after that I walked a mile and a half into the town, for I was living outside in the country. On my way I met a few colored men and women—very drunk indeed.

Keeping Christmas!

To see those darkies dressed in European clothes, very tattered ones often enough, with their feet squeezed into ill-fitting boots or high-heeled, white, cheap, shoes, reeling along, a bottle under each arm sometimes, and to know that was what Christmas meant to them!

But gradually I perceived that these were only the minority, more obvious in such a little town than in a big city. I suppose just as many, on an average, of the white people in the big cities—like London, New York, or Chicago, think of Christmas as merely a time for eating and drinking too much.

CHRISTMAS CAROLS OF NASSAU

In any case, drunk or sober, there was a sense of gaiety about these people, and in the evening when I sat at home, I could hear in fitful starts, from beyond my fruit-filled garden, the weird monotone of rhythmic drumming and of a curious time without tune played upon a tin trumpet or with a large cow-bell. From wherever it sounded it was unvaried and might have been played by the same persons over and over again; but from the fact that I could locate the sounds, now far, now near, I came to realize that many people in different places were practising. Practising for what? I wondered, but when I went beyond my gates, all was dark; I could see nothing and no one was about.

On the twenty-fourth the boatman's wife came to ask if I wanted any washing done, and said she wanted to earn something to "pay for Christmas." Then she asked me, "Are you goin' down to market in the mornin' to see them keepin' the Lord's birthday?"

"About what time?" said I.

"About two or three o'clock," she said solemnly.

"But it's dark then!"

"Oh yes, and the masquerade done look won'erful in the dark, Ma'am. You should see it." She went off happily with my linen under her arm, and I asked one or two others about the masquerade. A boy who had come in to climb my cocoanut tree and pick the nuts for me, said as he knelt by the ground peeling them, "The battleship's in, an' if they let th' sailors come off, we shan't be able to have our fun."

"Why not?" I asked him.

"Cos dey'll all get drunk, Ma'am, and spoil all our fun."

"Will your people get drunk too?"

"Oh no, Ma'am. Dey won't. Dey's done drinkin' by ter night. No. Dey won't be drunk, not de colored ones." When he had peeled the last cocoanut he rose, raised his tattered cap with the manners of a courtier and slowly walked away. And I made arrangements to be at the market at four o'clock on Christmas morning. This curious hour of their carnival dates from the days of slavery, when the slaves had their games in the night, secretly.

A UNIQUE FESTIVAL

The city of Nassau is said to be the only place in the world where this masquerade can still be seen. It is entirely a return to primitive custom and is as natural to these people as eating is. It has been handed down to them through many centuries, and the wise British Government looks on without interfering and allows them, from the evening until eight in the morning of Christmas Day, to keep their festival in their own way.

All that night in fitful rhythmic starts, this strange monotone beating of the drum, blowing of the penny trumpet, and shaking of the single cow-bell went on around and about my garden. There is no tune to this music, but it has a very curious time, which everybody keeps. This made the place sound like some uncanny engine throbbing, or like a great heart beating. It was quite unmusical, but it was haunting and seemed almost to have color.

Innumerable stars twinkled in a dark sky as I started on Christmas morning to walk along the winding white Bay Street, and the boats moored in the silent bay were like innumerable phantoms. Occasionally the lighthouse turned the search-light upon Hog Island, opposite, and behind me flitted the lime-colored moon, which shed strange ghostlike shadows from the sweeping banana tree to the gleaming road; from the broad leaves of great palms, from the pointed tips of the poinsettias, and along the flat surfaces of cream-colored houses, from some of which glided queer masqued apparitions ringing the rhythmic bell, while an occasional band of masqueraders would be led by one dancing backwards a curious kind of pas seul—one step forward and two steps back—to the time beaten with fingers upon a small cask with opened ends covered in taut skin, slung over the shoulders of one who did not dance. These bands jogged onward—faster than I could walk and were soon lost in the graveyards which lie under great cotton-seed trees on the outskirts of the trim and tidy town.

THE STAGE SETTING

It was an uncanny walk, while the sky gradually grew less dark and the moon got whiter. In the town the occasional electric bulbs were alight, forcing an artificial, almost theatrical light upon the peopled street. Up in the balconies over the shops were the onlookers, and there were also crowds of colored people on either side of the street (not every one dances in the masque ball). Here and there, in little knots or singly, hung the colored emblems of the power of Great Britain, looking so very much like police in the Guilbert and Sullivan operas, but one has to take them seriously, for not only do they represent the Law in Nassau, but many of them have enlisted voluntarily and gone to represent the Empire in the devastating war, somewhere in France or Egypt.

Little by little, as I watched, the lime-color seemed to leave the moon and spread itself in broad sweeps across the sky, as the dark blue changed into an indescribable shade and the stars, one by one, went out.

THE DAYBREAK CARNIVAL

In this uncertain light, mysterious and shadowy, there rushed up and down the street a crowd weirder than anything I have ever imagined. The beating of the drums and all the sounds of the previous night were concentrated now. Hundreds were doing it. And the most curious thing was this: you might walk the whole length of the street and from end to end you would hear no variation in the rhythm which every one kept perfectly, without any single leader; men, women, and children were like clock work. The dances varied slightly; some of the men and boys went about in pre-arranged bands, with the leader dancing backwards, like the groups I had met on my way down. The best costumes were to be seen among these bands, which always kept to themselves and never seemed to change their personnel. Entirely without reason or order (except among individual groups), these hordes rushed up and down the whole length of the town from long before day-break until eight in the morning.

"Heathenish! Pagan!" a writer to "The Guardian" burst out angrily the following day. And so it was; yet there is art in it—if to get essential character entire be art. It is the last remnant—and perhaps the only visible one—of the ancient history of this race, so strangely transplanted by the English and kept as slaves until the abolition of slavery.

When one realizes that they have no language of their own, that they are Christians and all speak English among themselves and wear as I have said, a sordid sort of European dress and are contented with their lot, it is all the more amazing to see them burst forth into this quite heathen carnival, and call it Christmas morning. But it means, to them, a great deal, and they take it very seriously, as I had occasion to realize.

ONE GLORIFIED CAKE-WALK

The general impression as daylight broke was that a mass of people had been looting one of the anthropological collections of the Natural History Museum in New York, except that the masks they wore were cheap and machine-made and were in imitation of white people, a point which leads me to imagine that the masquerade itself is but a mild thing now in comparison to what it was in heathen times.

About this time I noticed in the moving crowds some of the sailors and non-commissioned officers from H. M. S. Sidney, the historic ship to which the Emden owed her disappearance from the high seas. I thought of the boy and the cocoanuts, but the sailors were perfectly sober. I can't say that I saw one person, man or woman, very much the worse for drink in this strange medley.

When dawn broke, or soon after, the Commandant appeared, immaculate in his white uniform, and seemed oblivious of the fact that in the dancing throng there was more than one parody of that uniform. There was even a "kiltie," and there was a parody of a British M. P. This latter never danced about, but walked sedately carrying a book and an umbrella and always alone; quite a number—even of the dancers—were alone, and I did not once see a man and a woman dancing together as we do. Several solitary dancers danced with closed umbrellas, as in the "cake-walk." The whole thing, I suppose, was an elaborated kind of a "cake-walk."

Some of the dresses would have not disgraced any masked ball, and the shapes of the hats worn were very interesting and the effects of them very fine; a few of the tallest hats were surmounted by a little Union Jack.

Many of the dresses were after the fashion of a clown's dress, and not the least remarkable thing about them was the choice of colors displayed. The combinations were not only striking and original, but often quite beautiful as well. And all the time the whole street was full of massed movement, swinging to one concentrated rhythm, which rang from end to end and stayed in my ears for days afterwards.

Daylight comes suddenly in this climate; the sky turned to a very pale blue, fading to lemon color near the sea, and behind the great waving leaves of trees on Hog Island, the white ships gleamed in the bay and the electric bulbs in the street seemed like lights left burning after a night's revelry. But the revelry still went on.

When it was about half past seven, I thought that there was enough light to make some photographs, and I was adjusting my kodak when a colored woman plucked my sleeve.

PERILS OF THE CAMERA FIEND

"I dunno who you are," she began anxiously, "but I thought maybe I'd better tell you, Ma'am, put your photograph thing away . . . dey doesn't want to be took" . . . and she drew me aside.

"Cover it," she said, putting my cape around the box.

"Dere was a feller takin' dos last year—an' a man got wild and bit off his ear. . . dey don't want no one carrying away dere faces dress'd up dis way."

So I put away my kodak—rather sorrowfully, but I didn't want to have my ear bitten off. My friend disappeared in the crowd. At eight o'clock the people began to scatter; but all day long in all the streets one met detachments of them and heard the strange beat of their rhythm, while in the churches negro voices rose on the air singing—in unison—Christmas hymns.

THE MEMORY LINGERS

For days afterwards souvenirs of the masquerade might be seen in the streets, here and there, usually worn or carried by boys, for the men had to go back to work; then gradually it died away, and at last, as one looked about it seemed to have been a dream.

Yet, even now, I have a very clear mental picture of the queerest Christmas morning I ever spent, and in my ear still runs the monotonous unending rhythm beaten out on their drums, trumpets, and cow-bells, and one-two-three, one-two-three; and one-two-three—and . . . on for ever.

The Art of Giving

The problem of what to give entirely vanishes if you'll follow these directions: Enter any good shop—go to the leather goods counter—ask to see the hand bags—make your choice. Then (and this is the important factor) look for the Colonial trademark—"the bag mark of quality."

If you find it you can be sure that the bag is as good as it looks—that the recipient will consider it one of her most welcome gifts.

If any of the bags illustrated strike your fancy and you find it difficult to procure same from your favorite dealer, remit the price direct to us, and we will forward it to you through a reliable retailer.

TO INSURE PROMPT SERVICE, ADDRESS DEPARTMENT 100

ALTHOUGH the detachable sides and body which enclose a touring car for winter use have served to increase cold weather driving by at least one hundred per cent, there are many lovers of the cold, crisp, fresh air who prefer to "drive in the open". For such, warm clothing and robes are necessary and it is naturally the hands and fingers which are most exposed to the numbing action of the cold. Many ingenious types of gauntlets and gloves have been devised. One of the most attractive of these serves as a glove both for moderate and for cold weather driving. This is essentially a glove within a glove and consists of the ordinary type of leather gauntlet and a woolen glove enclosed within it. This double thickness of wool and leather gives protection from extreme cold and yet the inner lining may be removed instantly so that the driver may take his choice in moderate weather of either an all wool or an all leather gauntlet. This unique glove is made in mitten form also, as well as in the type which has a three-finger mitten and leaves the index finger free.

SIGNALING BY LIGHTED HAND

A large number of automatic and mechanically controlled signals have been placed upon the market which indicate to the driver "of the car behind" the intention of the driver of the first car. However, regardless of the efficacy of such devices, it is probable that the extended hand of the driver, serving as an indication of a sudden stop or turn, will always be used as a warning signal. While the extended hand of the driver is easily visible in daylight, such a motion can not well be seen at night unless in the brightly illuminated city streets, or unless the lights of the car behind are shining above the legally-prescribed limit. To overcome this difficulty, a driver may equip himself with a novel hand signal lamp which is connected by flexible cord to the storage battery of the car and which is held in place on the back of the hand by means of an elastic. This consists of a red bull's-eye light surrounded by red transparent letters spelling "safety first." Inasmuch as this light is but three inches in diameter and is strapped to the back of the hand, it does not interfere with steering or operation of the control levers and yet it immediately serves as an automatic warning as soon as the driver's hand is extended. The price of this is $2.

THE NEW CORD TIRE

The term luxury has been applied to nearly every part of the modern motor, but it would hardly be expected by the layman that the tires would be included in this category. This term is applicable, however, to the "cord" tire, which is rapidly becoming optional or regular equipment on many of the higher priced cars. Probably the average driver is familiar with the name cord tire without knowing exactly its difference in construction or the advantages obtained from its use. Briefly, the cord tire is a luxury tire, not because of its higher price (about fifty per cent more than other tires), which is justified by the higher cost of production, but by the fact that its superior resiliency absorbs many of the small depressions and inequalities in the road, which would ordinarily be communicated by the fabric tire to the car and occupant. The fabric tire is built up of successive layers of closely woven fabric or heavy canvas and rubber. Such tires must be carried at a high point of inflation in order to prevent the bending of the walls as the tire flattens at its point of contact with the road. This bending serves to separate the various layers of rubber and fabric and prepares the way for a dangerous or at least expensive blow-out. The cord tire, on the other hand, being composed of layers of cords or heavy threads, is not cemented together by intervening layers of rubber, and the body of the tire is therefore more flexible and resilient. It may be carried at a slightly lower inflation pressure, and because of the ease with which it rolls over slight inequalities in the road, it has become famous as a gasoline-saving as well as a comfort-giving tire.

SUBMARINE LINES FOR MOTORS

Whether the successful trips of the Deutschland will be repeated or not, the submarine is a vehicle which has caught the popular fancy and it is but natural that its type should be duplicated in the most used of all land vehicles, the automobile pleasure car. One of the well-known manufacturers has produced a distinctive type of body known as the submarine model, which consists of two "cockpits," the forward one for the driver and a companion, and the one at the stern for two passengers. These are separated by a "bulkhead," while the "deck" of the car is finished in a conventional mahogany planking with well-caulked seams. The rear terminates in the popular pointed end of the speed boat. By means of auxiliary seats unfolding from each side of the car over the running-board, the capacity of the vehicle may easily be increased to six persons. Communication between the front and rear compartment is afforded by means of a "hatchway," which is opened by folding and tilting the seat at the right of the driver.

FOILING THE SNOW KING

With the advent of winter, the average motor will be used more as a utility vehicle than as a pleasure car. This means that much of the driving will be done in stormy weather and through mud, slush, and snow. When a car is wanted under these conditions, it is generally wanted "in a hurry." It therefore behooves the owner who keeps his car in a private garage to make sure that a sudden snow flurry or a rain storm followed by freezing will not interfere with the opening of his garage doors. This is a fault encountered with the ordinary type of doors which swing outward and which clear the ground in front by only an inch or so. Under these conditions of construction, a light fall of snow, which may first melt slightly and then freeze, will interfere seriously with the use of the car, and ice picks may need to be brought into play before the difficulty can be overcome. If the garage is of such construction that the doors must swing outward, it is well to mount them on a sill and to slope the ground away from the garage so that water and slush will not accumulate in front of the doors. Failing in this, it is well to provide a drain directly in front of the door and to keep even the slightest fall of snow shoveled or swept away from the ground over which the doors will swing.

My dear Mrs. Gordon:

It was so charming of you and Mr. Gordon to send us that exquisite vase. Jack has told me so much about you, and I am looking forward to meeting you on our wedding day. Until then, believe me,

Most sincerely,

Margaret Dillon.

November third.

Unless one has engraved invitations with spaces left to fill in with the name, date, and other variable quantities, when giving formal dinners and luncheons, it is more usual to write the note in the form of a personal letter as follows:

My dear Mrs. Bertram:

You will be delighted to hear that the Beverley Nortons have arrived in town for the Horse Show, and so we are taking the opportunity of asking a few people in to dinner on Thursday night to meet them. Won't you and Mr. Bertram join us?

Looking forward to seeing you on the 21st, at 8 o'clock,

Faithfully yours,

Dorothy Charters.

248 Madison Avenue.

Let the uninitiated beware of thinking that this may be an informal affair. A well-known army man once gave the following advice to a debutante—"The more informal the invitation, my dear, the more particular you should be to wear your best bib and tucker." It is a fact that the army etiquette influences most of the customs in society, so the Colonel's words should be remembered, and when in doubt one should put on one's best, for the hostess will appreciate the fact that one is trying to honor the invitation.

Perhaps one is informed of the engagement of the daughter of the house by a charming little personal note, which is the only form such an announcement should take; this note should be answered by some such cordial and informal manner as this:

My dear Mrs. Harkness:

But what a delightful piece of news, and how clever of Dorothy to keep her secret so. We shall all be so delighted to take tea with you on Thursday, and we look forward to meeting Mr. Stanley, who is indeed to be congratulated.

With many messages of affection for the little bride-elect and kindest greetings to you and Mr. Harkness, believe me,

Most sincerely,

Marie Quincy.

December eleventh.

The modern art of writing notes of this kind consists in being natural, in using the same language one would use in speaking, for then there is a true ring and a simplicity which shows the experienced writer.

Abbreviations should never be used in addressing the envelope for personal notes; both the name and the state should be written out in full. Figures, however, are used in preference to writing the street numbers out in full, because it is easier to understand; figures are also more accurate in giving the date and hour of an invitation. It is just these little subtleties which show, even in her correspondence, the hand of the woman of the world.

about this comfort. Beyond a doubt she felt behind the form letter the genuineness of the sorrow her Sovereigns feel for all bereaved England.

I am not one of those enthusiasts who are entirely carried away by the contemplation of the horrors of to-day. Of course, Christmas shall not find me neglecting my friends abroad, whether they are at home or in the trenches, but I will not on that account forget that we have people of our own to look after. After all, the wonderful display in our shops shows that there is yet no lack of supply from Europe,—from London, from Paris, from Russia, from Italy, from Germany. Let us go forth and buy, and in this wise way put money in circulation.

WHY BE ASHAMED OF CHRISTMAS SPIRIT?

Last year, I went to a delightful Christmas party. It was an evening affair, a dinner of a hundred covers, and it was followed by a gorgeous tree. The gifts were not trifles and were chosen with rare judgment and taste. The gracious hostess had remembered the strangers within the New York gates. She herself was not a New York woman; indeed, she had been here but a short while. But she had searched out the people from home, who had but few acquaintances in this great city; and these she had gathered together, not giving them a separate entertainment, but bringing them in touch with her New York friends. The idea was not new. It was but a variation of the best of impulses from the kindest of hearts. To select gifts for such an assemblage must have been a pleasure indeed. I am sure also that so wise and considerate a woman did her Christmas shopping early.

WHY NOT EVEN ENCOURAGE IT?

It is a pity that all the Christmas spirit can not be so gracious, even among those who are not poverty-pinched and who can afford to be happy and give happiness. In great measure we have to learn not to mind the petty graft, the greed, and the selfishness which always come to the surface with the Christmas season. We have this always with us, and perhaps, when we come to reflect, we are responsible for much of it. We are cowards, many of us, cowards before absurd conventions. The vulgar man who, in Uncle George's time, always "opened a bottle of wine," is to-day a slave to maltres d'hôtel, head waiters, servitors, and the like, burnishing his light to shine in public places. The man who puts down his name at the head of the club list for Christmas boxes for servants with a ten or twenty when the custom has been five dollars, is of this class; and even more contemptible is he who imitates him, especially if he can not afford it. There is no reason for closing our hearts against the appeal of Christmas, but there is common sense in everything. In a season of good will, we must not spoil giving by the arrogance of our gift.

ON HER DRESSING-TABLE

"OH! to be a Hottentot," sighs the charming woman who has acquired lines which are only compatible with the aesthetic ideals of that untutored tribe, where stoutness and beauty are synonymous. It is a touching story, this search for beauty of line, when nature apparently has other plans for one. Almost pathetic is the case of the man or woman who can never get thin or never get fat,—in other words, of all those who cannot arrive at a normal condition. Balance is what one needs physically as well as mentally.

THE ASCETICISM OF REDUCING

Persistency is the chief virtue necessary for the woman who is trying to reduce, persistency and more than a little asceticism. Some women who try all the heroic measures of the Turkish bath and who really succeed in losing a few pounds, undo all the results of their efforts by overeating soon afterwards. But if one persists in taking plenty of exercise, and if one has the strength of character to avoid starchy foods and sweets, then slimness will undoubtedly follow.

As a distinct aid to this method there is a reducing cream which is considered very efficacious. It may be applied at night on the parts to be reduced and then washed off in the bath in the morning. This process is carried on for a week, and then an astringent is used after the bath each morning instead of the cream at night. They whisper that this astringent was once used by that incomparable actress, Sarah Bernhardt, whose classic lines are still the envy of womankind. The cream is $5 for a half pound jar, and the astringent is $2.50 a bottle.

The woman who attempts reducing should pay particular attention to her hair and complexion. A drastic treatment for the body in the way of dieting needs a counter-irritant, as it were, in extra nourishment for the hair and skin. One specialist has originated a hot oil system which is considered an excellent treatment for all scalp troubles. It re-

No one would ever suspect from the exterior of these twin jars that the one contains a cream which restores the contour and that the cream in the other charms back the color of youth; the former, $6; the latter, $3 moves all impurities by thoroughly and naturally cleansing the scalp; and by nourishing the hair tubes, it promotes the growth of luxuriant hair. All specialists find that warming the skin before making any application adds to the efficacy of the application. This warming is done by friction or massage, or the tonic may be applied immediately after a shampoo, when the scalp is warm and the pores are open.

A NEW SCALP TREATMENT

The remedy which is mentioned above may conveniently be applied at home. Each bottle contains material sufficient for ten treatments, and full directions come with it. The condition of one's scalp should be mentioned in writing for the treatment. There is also a scalp tonic which is considered a splendid antidote for an oily scalp and which leaves the hair in a beautifully healthy condition; this costs 50 cents a bottle. The material for the hot oil treatment may be purchased for $2; special material for special cases costs $2.50 a bottle.

The art of making a powder for the face consists in combining ingredients so that they are perfectly smooth, not gritty, and so that they adhere evenly, yet do not clog the pores. A powder of this kind has just come on the market. It has a particularly velvety texture, and it is extremely soft, even, and fine.

is of rose silk with a tight pointed bodice and a full straight skirt, finished at the hem with a plaited ruffle. Over this is worn a trailing coat of deeper rose chiffon with kimono sleeves. The front is finished with silver braid and silver tassels and a great full blown rose.

An evening frock like the lilac and gray one on page 73 should have silver slippers to complete it. This season one may find charming slippers of silver cloth combined with some other material which are quite as smart as those of all silver. One of the new designs is illustrated at the left below on this page. It is of silver cloth, combined with either black or white material brocaded with silver. This slipper is made on a new last with a long vamp and a French heel, and its price is $12. The slipper illustrated at its right is cut on the same lines and is also priced $12. Its material is silver cloth which has pink or blue threads running through it. The material is reversed on the heel, so that the color is more apparent, and the top of the slipper is outlined with the reversed cloth.

A moderately high walking boot of mahogany colored calf, is smart, sensible, and comfortable, all three at once

Many women object to silver or gold slippers because they are so apt to tarnish. A certain cleaner who has discovered a new process makes it his business to keep silver or gold slippers in good condition. He will entirely renovate the slippers and make them look like new.

The boot illustrated at the top of this page is particularly good for walking, and it is not too heavy to be comfortable. It is of mahogany colored calf, made with a long vamp, and it is minus the elaborate trimming to which the conservative woman objects on her walking boots. It is priced at $10.

While on the subject of shoes it will be well to say something regarding spats. The early tendencies of this season favored light topped shoes, but later, low shoes in patent leather and fine dull kid with dove grey or beige spats were and are considered smart by the most fashionable women. The spats are of heavy felt or broadcloth bound at the top with a narrow band of leather, and fastened with bone buttons. They are priced at $5.

It is of silver cloth, combined with either black or white material brocaded with silver, and its lines of vamp and heel are as new as possible

Through the silver cloth of this slipper run gay threads of pink or blue, and the French heel is covered with the same material, turned inside-out

These robes were so enthusiastically received that this year we made up a larger assortment, and a number of the better retail stores have our "Artfur" Lap Robes for sale. They have the lustre of genuine fur and the same indescribable responsiveness and softness to the touch.

It is daintily scented and put up in an octagonal box in white, flesh color, rachel, and brunette, and it may be bought for 50 cents. The makers of this powder have devoted much time and thought to a blend which they consider to be not only harmless but beneficial to the complexion.

The woman who studies herself intelligently realizes, of course, the importance of contour or outline, but next comes color. This does not necessarily mean a very roseate hue, since there is a healthy pallor; the point is that a skin should not be dead looking. As a means of prevention there is a new cream which comes in two attractive little brown jars. After washing the face at night with some simple soap, one pats in the cream, which is said to remove the lines, to build the tissues, and to restore the contour. In the morning one pats in the other cream before bathing, and it should be rinsed off without the use of soap; this cream acts as a bleach to bring back the color of youth.

These two creams are made from an old formula which is considered particularly beneficial if it is properly used. The caution which the authority gives is that they must be patted and not rubbed into the skin. The price for the two jars is $6 for the contour cream and $3 for the bleach.

A bath salt that stimulates and softens the skin and at the same time imparts a delicious perfume redolent of flowers and spices, has accomplished its mission in life. A soap is made to match it, and a powder; the salts may be bought for $2.35 the bottle, the soap for $2.50 the cake, and the powder, which is of an extremely fine texture, for $4.90 the box.

WHAT THEY READ

FOR the approaching Christmas season, the third beclouded by the horror over yonder, the publishers have provided many attractive books, though the importations from Europe seem much fewer than usual, and many are reprints of earlier things. It may well be that Great Britain is in no mood to publish or to buy the gay and costly gift books that used to be so characteristic of earlier Christmas seasons. Indeed it is even noticeable that some expensive illustrated books of the past are offered now at lower rates than ever before, as for example the A. and C. Black books, with text and illustration in color dealing with various parts of England and with cities and countries the world over. On the whole, however, books have felt the rise that has affected other articles. This Christmas, as usual, the classics of childhood are offered in new form and with new illustrations. Some of the most charming books of the season are these reprints. Those who love the illustrated classics for adults as beautifully presented in recent years will find that the American publishers have done their best to make up for the lack of many such editions that used to be imported from England. Some of the most beautifully colored illustrations of this season are from the native presses and the work of native artists. It is a little surprising, however, that there have not been provided a great many such books illustrating aspects of this country. There is a hint for some enterprising publisher in the pamphlets recently issued by the Secretary of the Interior to illustrate the beauties of our national parks of which we have a glorious group in the west, unsurpassed for scenery by any of the European parks, and unapproached in area. The newer reservations among the mountains of New England and the Middle Atlantic States will also soon furnish subjects for brush and pen, and there are like subjects ready to hand in the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence Valley, the minor lakes of New York, and the basin of the Chesapeake. Meanwhile, the Christmas books of this season furnish a feast of the eye and as well of the mind.

NEW EDITIONS OF OLD FAVORITES

RUBÁIYÁT OF OMAR KHAYYÁM, RENDERED INTO ENGLISH VERSE, by EDWARD FITZGERALD, seeks to provide at a moderate price a well-printed and agreeably illustrated edition of the best known volume of oriental verse. Those who know Tagore, some of whom probably do not know his poetic predecessor of more than eight hundred years ago, will find it interesting to compare the frank and unfailingly faithful modern mystic with the wayward though hopeful and sometimes spiritual old Persian master. Omar deserves increased popularity if only because of the stupid denunciation recently hurled at him from a sensational pulpit in Boston. The paper of this volume is heavy and thick, but not of fine quality, while the smaller type used in quoting the illustrated stanzas adds naught to the charm or value of the book. The regular text, which gives both the first and the second edition, is in clear, large, black type, which could hardly be bettered for reading, but might have been more beautiful. As to the illustrations by Edmund Dulac, they are in the delicately toned and almost ivory tinted fashion recently made familiar by some English illustrators. Each picture is lightly attached to a pale brown page. They are well drawn, and those that deal with night are peculiarly effective. The cover is of dark blue cloth with rich gold tooling on one side. (New York: Hodder and Stoughton; $1.50 net.)

OLD CHRISTMAS, by WASHINGTON IRVING, is made up of extracts from some of Irving's volumes, "Bracebridge Hall" among them. Irving had a peculiarly heartsome way of treating the holiday season, and after three-quarters of a century his Christmas sketches and stories nobly stand the test of time. His publishers, as most readers perhaps do not know, bought the plates of his works when they were out of print, about a dozen years before his death, and put him in the way of earning by old books and new something like a quarter of a million dollars. Long after his death Irving's works were the most profitable on the list of the publishing house, and his heirs continued after the copyright expired to receive a handsome honorarium. This pleasing volume is admirably illustrated in color and in black and white by Frank Dadd. (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $2.50 net.)

THE ARABIAN NIGHTS, with illustrations by RENÉ BULL, has a title that ingeniously simulates Arabic script. The volume is a huge quarto printed in clear black type. Of course the text has been judiciously scrutinized so that it may serve as well for youth as for age. Mr. Bull's illustrations include ten colored plates of great beauty, done with fine feeling for the oriental text, and with about a hundred drawings in black and white, hardly so well done as those in color. The volume is one of the richest of the season. (New York: Dodd, Mead and Company; $2 net.)

text and illustrations, presented in a richly beautiful binding of green Levant and making a gift book of unusual charm. The text is English. (New York: Dodd, Mead and Company; $3.50 net.)

SALT WATER POEMS AND BALLADS, by JOHN MASEFIELD, gives us an illustrated Christmas edition of the poet's best sea lyrics. Masefield's strongest inspiration has usually been drawn from the sea, and some of these poems are worthy to take a place with the salty songs that have made British seacraft famous wherever the English language is spoken. Mr. Pear's decorated title page and illustrations give further charm to the volume. The cloth cover has on one side effective gold tooling and a sea piece in color. (New York: The Macmillan Company; $2 net.)

A QUINTET OF NEW NOVELS

LOVE AND LUCY, by MAURICE HEWLETT, reveals one more phase of a protean talent. Mr. Hewlett still retains many traces of the manner that he acquired somewhat late in his career from George Meredith, and this is exemplified in such phrases as "herself a prisoner, her lips a prize", and in the staccato dialogue of clever folk. There remains no trace of Mr. Hewlett's earliest phase, the "Forest Lovers," more's the pity, but it is satisfactory to have him well emancipated from his later phase in which he gave the world those labored novels of the eighteenth and the early nineteenth centuries so reminiscent of Meredith's method and so far inferior to the model. This story has life, movement, bright dialogue, piquant incident, and genuine passion. As to the transformation of character wrought by love and jealousy, that may or may not be accepted by the reader, but the ingenuity of the motif will command cordial recognition. Lucy is a natural and lovely creation. As usual Mr. Hewlett does not write for the miss of sixteen, though his story is far beyond the range of the censor. So clever a man should give over quoting in three languages. He richly deserves the typographical blunder that makes him misquote Virgil's famous phrase as "rari nautes," which suggests an awkward attempt to substitute "sailors" for "swimmers." (New York: Dodd, Mead and Company; $1.35 net.)

MR. BRITLING SEES IT THROUGH, by H. G. WELLS, though technically fiction is hardly to be called a novel. It is rather an impression of the great European war as reflected in the personal experiences and intellectual and spiritual reactions of the person whose name gives title to the book, and in the corresponding reactions of those about him. Such is the book in the main, but it is much more, since Mr. Wells courageously uses his extremely loose and broad structural scheme to introduce his own philosophy, current criticism of the British War Office and its subordinates great and small, discussion pro and con of the American attitude toward the war, many views of Germany, from the bitterest and most vindictive to the calmest and justest and finally his own hopes for an era of permanent peace and international goodwill conveyed through the long letter which the bereaved English father writes to a German father who has also suffered loss. Along with this composite and comprehensive picture of England at war go a vast deal of the author's characteristic humor, no small share of his not infrequent tedium, and several passages of genuinely moving passion, expressed with fine restraint. Taken as a whole the book shows Mr. Wells at his very best, and shows also new and hitherto hardly indicated phases of his power. Perhaps persons of leisure will not rebel even at what seem his tedious passages, for they are done with ease and charm, though an author less sure of his public could hardly have ventured to create those great moveless pools in which the current of the narrative seems again and again to have come to its final pause. (New York: The Macmillan Company; $1.50 net.)

THE WONDERFUL YEAR, by WILLIAM J. LOCKE, takes the author and his readers once more to France, where, as usual, he writes with such certainty, charm, humor, and emancipation from British ideals and conventions that one inclines to call him a man not born in his native land, a Briton in political allegiance, but essentially Gallic. The story continually trembles on the edge of farce. Every character is an extravaganza, every incident close to an impossibility, but really the thing goes; one accepts it all, its extravaganzas, its impossibilities, its farcical inconsequence, with uncritical joy. Mr. Locke has written much, far too much it may be thought by those who have been condemned to read several of his recent novels dealing with life or something remotely resembling life in Great Britain. This time he has gone back to his earliest and best self. He has written a totally unimportant book that should entertain all persons with leisure to read unimportant books. He has regained his lightness of touch, and one can forgive even his three French phrases per page, for after all his French is easy. How he strung out the adventures of Corinne and Martin to nearly four hundred pages only Mr. Locke himself, if indeed, he, could manage to say, but those who have caught the Locke step, so to speak, would not have had him baste a page of his agreeable frivolities. (New York: John Lane Company; $1.40 net.)

PINCUS HOOD, by ARTHUR HODGES, in spite of the rather smart method of advance advertising resorted to by the publishers, is a charming book of fresh and lively interest. The story reads like the first serious effort of a clever and promising writer, though Mr. Hodges is credited with an earlier book. He of the title rôle is an extremely attractive and far from impossible person, and the leading lady is a delightful person, though it is a severe strain upon credulity that the author imposes upon us when he makes her a prisoner at her brother's behest. The "Club" is something new in American fiction, but the conception is better than the execution. This episodic element might have been far more effective had the author rewritten it a few times, sharpened its portraits, and polished its dialogue. As to the painter hero, his early ineptitude is perhaps a little overdone, but he steadily holds the interest of the reader, and the character of his rival mightily helps. Pincus Hood is a novel for the more intelligent and appreciative part of the reading public but specifically for those who turn to fiction mainly for solace and clean amusement, not for those in search of problems or philosophy. It deserves a wide and friendly welcome, and all who read it will hope for another and even better book from its author. (Boston: Small and Maynard and Company; $1.40 net.)

BETTY AT FORT BLIZZARD, by MOLLY ELLIOT SEAWELL, is a popular author's annual contribution to the fictional romance of the Christmas season. As usual a pretty girl takes a distinguished part in the action, and of course there is the hero, this time military. Edward Frederick contributes

BOOKS FOR THE ELDERS

FRANCE: HER PEOPLE AND HER SPIRIT, by LAWRENCE JERROLD, was written by one who has written of the sister republic before. This time a sympathetic Englishman comes to his task with his sympathies stimulated and warmed by the warlike alliance between Britain and France. It is no longer fashionable in Great Britain to speak of the Frenchman as a mixture of "monkey and tiger," for the Frenchman is to his British brother-in-arms about equally compounded of hero and Christian. The book makes a solid volume beautifully printed on clear, white paper, attractively bound, and profusely illustrated with black and white drawings, among them some entertaining French caricatures. (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Company; $3 net.)

GARDEN ORNAMENTS, by MARY H. NORTHEND, is a rather slim book of large oblong size, intended to tell garden lovers how to furnish their pleasant retreats. It is to be hoped that nobody will buy everything that Miss Northend recommends, for she has been indefatigable in presenting the claims of whatever might by any stretch of fancy be supposed suitable for use or ornament in a garden. By all means let the fortunate mistress of a shady and sunny half acre stop after she has provided gate, seats, bird bath and arbor, and leave gazebos, pergolas, Japanese stone lanterns, and the like to those with larger area. In justice to the author, be it said, she does not advise everything for all gardens, large or small. (New York: Duffield and Company; $2.50 net.)

THE PAGEANT OF ENGLISH LITERATURE, by EDWARD PARROT, seems to be intended mainly as an album of richly colored and beautifully executed pictures. These illustrations reproduce the work of the greatest British painters of the last century. Mr. Parrot's text deals with the literature of the British Isles from its dawn to the time of Tennyson. We have Caxton and Chaucer, Shakespeare, of course, Milton, Dryden, Burns and all the great ones. The illustrations are of persons, places, characters, scenes. Incidentally there is an excellent portrait of Thackeray, the head that many like best, though there are those who prefer that which does naught to mitigate the broken nose. (New York: Sully and Kleinteich; $3.)

PICTURES OF THE WONDER OF WORK, by JOSEPH PENNELL, is dedicated to Constantin Meunier, as "the prophet and exponent of the wonder of work," a title which Mr. Pennell might well have claimed for himself. By way of preface to this fascinating album of those that create large things with laborious hands, Mr. Pennell gives us a genuinely eloquent and significant lecture delivered by him before the Royal Society of Arts in London. There is no other letter press except the brief but expressive notes accompanying the fifty-two drawings, etchings and lithographs. These pictures, the familiar sketchy but revealing spidery black lines on white ground with now and then bits of strong, black mass, and somewhat detailed architectural members, are those that the artist has taught his public to know and enjoy, for he has, indeed, "created the taste by which he is to be enjoyed." He has fairly ransacked the world for subjects. This country has yielded him much, but so have Italy, Great Britain, France, Belgium, Germany, Holland and Greece; wherever he goes, his pencil is at home, whatever he draws betrays the democratic touch and sympathy. Perhaps Mr. Pennell is building better than he knows, preaching the worth of work even more strongly than he realizes. (Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company; $2 net.)

FROM THE DEEP WOODS TO CIVILIZATION: CHAPTERS IN THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF AN INDIAN, by CHARLES A. EASTMAN (OHIVESA), enables the author to present a comprehensive view of his interesting and significant life from his fifteenth year to the present time. His account of his sudden transfer from the wigwam to a boarding-school is full of charm and interest. So, too, is his rapid review of his college life and of his first close acquaintance with the domestic life of cultivated persons in the east. He went as a doctor to an Indian agency, full of faith in the white man's civilization and religion, to receive a rude shock at discovering the squalid rascality of those who were robbing the Indians. His further disillusionment came when he attempted to obtain redress for these wrongs at the hands of the authorities at Washington, in the Harrison administration. Even under President Roosevelt, who had known the Indians in their western haunts, the powers of evil were too strong to be ousted. The marriage of Dr. Eastman to Miss Goodale undoubtedly helped to keep him true to the civilization he had adopted, in spite of his grievous disappointment with titular Christians and selfish white politicians. Nothing in the book is more delightful than the author's account of the small group of Indians in Canada and the United States among the lakes above the source of the Mississippi, who still live as their wild ancestors lived. Dr. Eastman has scored again; he has given us a charming volume, without padding and without pretence. (Boston: Little, Brown and Company; $2 net.)

BIRD FRIENDS, by GILBERT H. TRAFTON, ministers to the comparatively new and entirely wholesome interest in the preservation of native birds. Mr. Trafton's book is not a padded thing after the manner of the nature fakers. It is intended to give needed and interesting information and to promote the preservation of the wild birds, which have been so often the victims of neglect or of reckless slaughter. The discussion of migration relates interesting facts probably unknown to all but specialists. Bird Music fills a brief chapter, with some graphic illustrations in musical notation. In a chapter entitled "Home Life of the Birds," Mr. Trafton tells many things besides the information connoted by the title. He tells us in another chapter how to know the birds, and in still another indicates, with circumstantial proof, the birds that destroy insect pests. Those who read of the enemies of birds will incline to bell the cat and shoot the red squirrel. How to protect birds, how to feed them in winter, and how to provide them with suitable nesting boxes are all carefully discussed. Mr. Trafton tells us that he has attempted to give in this single book information not elsewhere to be found except in many volumes, and he has certainly covered his subject with great fullness. Many illustrations, the best in black and white; help out the text. (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company; $2 net.)

MOUNT VERNON: WASHINGTON'S HOME AND THE NATION'S SHRINE, by PAUL WILSTACH, partly historical, partly descriptive, and admirably illustrated, is a book which should have appeared long ago, for it will stir the patriotism and excite the interest of all who read its beautifully printed pages. Mr. Wilstach's method is partly documentary, but mainly narrative, enough of the former to give living realism to the story but not enough to tire the reader. At one point there seems to be a slight contradiction of statements, and the conjecture that George Washington saw the digging of the cellar at Mt. Vernon is of doubtful probability, for if the cellars were dug in 1739 or 1740, George was then living either at his birthplace with an elder brother or upon his own patrimony, opposite Fredericksburg, with his mother. It is not certain that he ever saw Mt. Vernon until he was about 14 years old. Mr. Wilstach's surprise at the well indoors at Mt. Vernon will amuse readers below Mason and Dixon's line, where the custom of indoor wells still survives in houses less than two generations old. It is satisfactory to find the author telling the oft ignored truth that the Washington family was not of the higher English aristocracy. Mr. Wilstach's text is properly supplemented by the beautifully clear illustrations, every one of which is significant. To read the text and examine these pictures is an excellent preparation for the pilgrimage to Mt. Vernon which every American should make. (Garden City and New York: Doubleday, Page and Company; $2 net.)

THE STORY OF THE UNITED STATES, by MARIE LOUISE HERDMAN, takes the author on a hike through American history in the course of which she hits the high places and skips most other parts of the topography. Her volume is a royal octavo handsomely printed on thick paper and illustrated with pleasantly tinted full-page drawings by A. S. Forrest. It has apparently been the aim of the author to give her readers the salient and especially the romantic incidents of our history, political, social, and military, with brief excursions into the literary and economic fields. If a reader seeks a comprehensive presentation of essential historic facts or a philosophic coordination of such facts, he must read some other volume than this, but if he is looking for mere entertainment with the larger incidents and bits of personal narrative, such as that touching Dolly Madison, he will probably not be misled as to facts and their relation and significance. It is hardly correct, however, to say that the Jackson and Anti-Jackson factions appeared after Jackson became

The Nestlé Permanent Hair Wave

Before Waving

*The Nestlé methods and
are patented.*

When recommending our permanent hair wave to the public we feel from time to time compelled to explain what a permanent hair wave really is or ought to be. Here is the explanation in short; but we would recommend all those who have to deal with straight hair to read Mr. Nestlé's booklet which is supplied free of charge to anyone.

A "wave" in our hair is of course produced by thousands of individually bent hairs fitting into each other. If these hairs do not fit, although they are individually wavy, the appearance is one of fluff or frizz. We cannot bend human hair at intervals, and fit them into each other, and expect them to stay there forever. The flexibility of the individuals, the traction of brush and comb, the destruction of the regularity by shampoos and a hundred other means interfering. Therefore, you cannot give a permanent hair wave and guarantee it for a certain time, say six months. A real permanent hair wave is a state of things corresponding with that of naturally grown wavy hair. It is either not permanent at all or it lasts so long as the hair on the head lasts. The Nestlé permanent hair waving results are permanent and nothing else, and these results are dealt with on the supposition that it is naturally wavy hair that we have given you in place of the former straight hair and nothing else. NESTLE PERMANENTLY WAVED HAIR means giving this character to straight hair by a steaming process. When finished the wearer must be able to handle it as if it was naturally wavy hair. It must at all times get curlier or wavier under the influences of rainy days, steam, perspiration, tonics, etc. We guarantee these qualities to stay from the day we treated such hair until it has grown away from the head. (Human hair grows at the rate of one-half inch per month.)

Mr. Nestlé first offered permanent waving to the public in 1905 in London. Since then this science has made extraordinary progress. It is applied at practically every European Court and has been recommended by hundreds of medical men as the best hair treatment in existence. (We would warn the public while referring to the Nestlé Wave as a hair treatment that this recommendation does not apply to the production of "FRIZZ" as done by the machine-working, uneducated imitator.) It costs less money than ordinary hairdresser's waving and saves time and annoyance. Over 50,000 heads of hair were waved at our London establishment since 1905 and this summer's attendance at our New York establishment was so enormous as to break every previous record. It takes about two hours to wave a full head of hair. No chemicals are applied and no unpleasantness or heat is felt by the client. The cost is according to the quantity of hair which we wave with a minimum of twelve dollars.

Educated young people of either sex are now accepted by Mr. Nestlé for instruction in his exceptional interesting work.

President, for all through the presidency of Adams the Democratic party was crystallizing about the personality of the General, though the opposition did not take the name of Whig until he had been some time in the White House. (New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company; $2.50 net.)

REMINISCENCES OF A WAR-TIME STATESMAN AND DIPLOMAT, 1830-1915, by FREDERICK W. SEWARD, comes as a sort of supplementary volume to the author's "Life and Letters of William H. Seward," his distinguished father. The son, at the age of thirty, was his father's assistant in the State Department under Lincoln, and he later served in the same post under Johnson and under Hayes. His reminiscences begin with his earliest recollections in the winter of 1833, when as a child, he was taken from bed at dead of night to begin the journey by sleigh to Albany, where his father was to sit as state senator and later as governor. The Albany of those days lives again in these lively reminiscent pages, and appears as a quaint little capital. Mr. Seward brought to Lincoln in February, 1861, confirmatory evidence of a plot to assassinate the President-elect at Baltimore, with the result that he changed the hour of his passing through that city on his way to Washington. Four years later, on the night of Booth's crime, Frederick W. Seward was himself nearly killed in trying to protect his father, whom an assassin attacked and seriously stabbed as he lay ill in bed. One of the most interesting incidents that Mr. Seward relates is concerned with his father's visit to Napoleon III and his talk with the Empress Eugénie and the Emperor in 1859. Later chapters of the book tell of the negotiations for the purchase of Alaska, of the author's diplomatic visit to the West Indies, and of the father's European trip at the close of the Civil War. This is, indeed, a significant and rarely interesting volume. The frontispiece portrait of the venerable author is full of distinction and mellow serenity. (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons; $3.50 net.)

CHILDHOOD FAVORITES REPRINTED

A LITTLE PRINCESS, by FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT, gives us once more a remarkably popular book for the young that has been liked by some of the old. Ethel Franklin Betts furnishes many lovely full-page illustrations in color. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; $2 net.)

THE BLACK ARROW, by ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON, is presented now as a juvenile, which it hardly was, but might well have been intended to be by the author. Stevenson himself was dissatisfied with the book, but it has had its share of popularity with persons of various ages. The edition is most successfully illustrated in colors and in black and white, by N. C. Wyeth; it is bound in engagingly gay boards. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons; $2.25 net.)

LITTLE ANN AND OTHER POEMS, by JANE and ANN TAYLOR, revives a quaint old favorite. The Kate Greenaway illustrations, of which we are, alas, to see no new ones, have the innocent charm that distinguished the work of that illustrator. The book is oblong and bound in yellow boards. (London and New York: Frederick Warren and Company; $1.)

tions by Harry Clarke. The illustrator has put immense spirit into his work. He has felt strongly the whimsical humor of Andersen, and has been able to convey his sense of this quality in conventionalized drawings, some in black and white, others in full color, and the latter are done without garishness, though with no symptom of weakness. Mr. Clarke's work deserves to rank high in its own distinctive class, and the volume will take its place as a highly successful presentation of Andersen. (New York: Brentanos; $5 net.)

PINOCCHIO: THE STORY OF A PUPPET, by "C. COLLODI" (CARLO LORENZINO), gives us a modern Italian classic for children in a new setting. The merit of Lorenzino's work lies in its astonishing freshness of conception and treatment. It comes to every child as a surprise, and the adventures of the wooden manikin are accepted with as unquestioning faith as those of heroes that once really lived and acted. Mariab L. Kirk furnishes well-conceived, well-drawn, and beautifully colored illustrations that really illustrate. The type is excellent. (Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company; $1.25 net.)

PLUTARCH'S LIVES, SELECTED AND RETOLD, by W. H. WESTON, provides a treat of years for the young who are not acquainted with this old and ever-new classic of miscellaneous biography. Plutarch should be in the library of every boy and girl. To this volume, William Rainey contributes sixteen drawings in very gay colors, such as would astonish Plutarch could he see himself thus set forth to the world. (New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company; $1.60 net.)

FOR YOUTH, THE ADVENTURER

DARING DEEDS OF HUNTERS AND TRAPPERS, by ERNEST YOUNG, F. R. G. S., takes the reader over four continents and into the far North in pursuit of adventure. American boys will probably be most interested in tales of hunters in our native wilds, but no boy will be able to resist the desire to read about the hunter pictured as facing four or five lions at once in the depths of Africa. Mr. Young tells his tales without unnecessary heroics, but with dramatic effect. Almost every kind of big game figures in his pages. He assures the reader that the stories are true. Pictures in lively colors add to the charm of the book. (Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company; $1.25 net.)

DARING DEEDS OF FAMOUS PIRATES by LT. E. KEBLE CHATERTON, R. N. V. R., gives to young readers tales selected and rewritten in whole or in part from the author's large work, "The Romance of Piracy." Going back to the dawn of piracy as a lawless but tolerated trade, the author comes down to within hailing distance of our own times. Americans will resent his application of the name "pirate" to Paul Jones, but there are curious technicalities of definition, and a good many early heroes of the British navy are not always to be distinguished from gentlemen of the Jolly Roger ensign. Some of the famous rogues and adventurers described are the black-bearded Captain Teach, Sir Henry Morgan, the much debated Captain Kidd, and others of less fame. Filibusters, buccaneers, and the like find ample treatment in these fascinating pages. Perhaps parents whose boys expect to be pirates when they grow up, will find Lieutenant Chatterton's book not so much an incitement to youthful ambition as a deterrent, for few of these heroes were happy ever after. Very gay illustrations brighten

NOBLESSE OBLIGE

TO the long list of her philanthropies, Mrs. Russell Sage has now added a bird haven. At a cost of $150,000 she has purchased Marsh Island off the south coast of Louisiana, and she has dedicated it as a perpetual refuge for North American birds from the snares and guns of the fowler.

Marsh Island up to the time it came into Mrs. Sage's possession was probably the greatest bird-slaughtering ground in America. In their spring and autumn migrations, it is the stopping-place for many varieties of birds, and in the winter it is frequented by great numbers of wild fowl. It is a natural refuge and building-place especially for egrets or snowy herons (which have been almost exterminated, owing to the demands for their snowy plumage) and also for herons, bittern, and loons. In winter many varieties of shore birds come there. Among the commonest fowl found on Marsh Island are Canada geese, snowy geese, the blue geese that are becoming extinct as a result of the campaigns of the gunners, and several kinds of ducks.

BIRDS ON MARSH ISLAND

On the west point of the island is a colony of royal terns, and to the north is a small city of laughing gulls, Caspian, and Forster terns, black skimmers, and other water birds. Some of the other birds are yellow-crowned night herons, Louisiana herons, great blue herons, chapperails, and a few of the rare sand-hill cranes. For years Mrs. Sage has been interested in bird preservation, and she has contributed $5000 a year to the Audubon Society. Through the efforts of Mr. Edward A. McIlhenny, who some years ago established a small bird refuge on his estate at Avery Island, Louisiana, she was acquainted with the facts in connection with Marsh Island and the desirability of securing it for a bird haven. Impressed by Mr. McIlhenny's plea, Mrs. Sage commissioned Dr. George Bird Grinnell, founder of the Audubon Society, to investigate the island, and when she received a report that the island, which is eighteen miles long with a total coast line of about sixty-five miles and an area of seventy-five thousand acres, was an ideal spot for a bird haven, she at once purchased it.

To protect the birds from poachers, a gasoline cutter will patrol the north side of the island, nearest the mainland, making its entire length each day. On the south side, which is less accessible because of the shore formation, it is thought that one or two sentinels on horseback will be sufficient. Signs have been put up declaring the island private property and warning gunners to keep off in accordance with the law of the state of Louisiana.

PROTECTING THE SNOWY HERON

Definite means for bringing snowy herons to Marsh Island are being considered. About the pools of fresh and brackish water, it is possible that heronries will be established, not only as resting places but as breeding grounds. This would necessitate the planting of trees, but it is believed that willows and swamp maples would flourish, affording a shelter in which colonies of the beautiful and persecuted egrets could easily be established.

A practical demonstration of what may be accomplished on Marsh Island has already been worked out by Mr. McIlhenny on his Avery Island estate. Several years ago, when the snowy herons had been almost exterminated by the plume hunters, he found six young birds in the swamps near Avery Island and took them home. They were raised

The One Accepted Standard

For over two years the entire electric vehicle industry has been striving to produce this car's equal in beauty, lightness, performance and price.

Electrics are lighter and lower in price—

But the Milburn Light Electric is still the one accepted and established standard of beauty, lightness and efficiency among electrics.

It is still the lightest electric built —still the most economical to run —still the easiest to operate
—still the easiest riding
—still the most beautiful and most popular of them all —and still the lowest in price.

The Milburn was the first real light electric. And today it stands alone—absolutely unapproached in its field—the modern low hung, roomy, comfortable car.

No car—electric or gasoline—can be operated at such small cost.

The best evidence of its dominating position is the effort of those from whom leadership has been wrested to modernize their cars—to approximate Milburn standards.

You must see this car to appreciate it. Dealers in principal cities.

period. Bracelet manchettes "cuff bracelets," such as are shown at the bottom of page 61, in the middle, were made after the pattern of lace cuffs and were of rose diamonds; they were very light in appearance. Corsage ornaments as high as seven inches were made in the form of bouquets or large leaves in diamonds; collars from three-quarters of an inch to one and one-half inches high were made of different jeweled motifs on a background of blue enamel or rock crystal. Tiaras worn as crowns, were of high importance, and were chiefly composed of diamonds.

It was at this time that the Mecca of jewel lovers shifted from the old and celebrated Palais Royal to the Boulevard des Italiens and the rue de la Paix, once known as the rue Napoleon. In this short street are originated the modes that are adopted on both sides of the Atlantic to-day; for here are the famous shops of Worth, Paquin, Doucet, and others of those Grandes Maisons whose art costumes the fashionable woman. Side by side with the salons of these dictators of fashion are the most famous jewel shops in the world, and among the foremost is that of Cartier, whose beautiful and unique creations in jeweled ornaments, as well as his exceptionally high standards, have brought him fame during many years.

In the years since de Manteuffel lost his wager, the skill of the French jeweler has shown no signs of diminishing; on the contrary the changes in jewel fashions have been of the widest. The discovery of the African diamond mines had a considerable influence on settings, as these stones were much larger than those in use and it was no longer necessary to work up the setting in an endeavor to emphasize the importance of the stones. The use of platinum for settings has also brought about extensive changes, and increased skill and ability among designers as well as increased good taste among wearers of jeweled ornaments, makes the jewels of to-day far lovelier than even the loveliest of the lovely jewels of the last century.

the pages, and the frontispiece shows Captain Teach in all his glory. (Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Co., $1.25 net.)

THE BANNER OF THE WHITE HORSE, by CLARENCE MARSH CASE, has the high merit of a preface in which the author frankly takes the reader into his confidence. He tells us that this tale for boys and girls was written fifteen years ago from data which he found in Green's historical works, a translation of Beowulf, a poem of Longfellow, and other familiar sources. He has softened the manners of the Saxon conquerors of Britain, whose doings he pictures, and has introduced some Christian characters by way of further smoothing the roughness of a warlike tale. His opening chapter is a spirited story of a boar hunt in the continental home of the Saxons. There follow a scene at the Witangemote and, later, the voyages to Britain and the scenes of the conquest. Mr. Case has done his task with lively effect, and the young people who read his book will have a new sense of their Saxon ancestors. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1 net.)

THE INDIAN FAIRY BOOK, contains twenty-four stories of the Red Men's imaginative literature taken from Schoolcraft's famous selection now sixty years in possession of a too negligent public. These stories have to do with bird, beast, and fabulous creatures, men, women and children. As here retold the tales fully justify their presentation to this generation of young readers, for they have the freshness and simplicity of Indian life before the white man had slain or demoralized his red brother. The illustrations are by Florence Choate and Elizabeth Curtis, but it does not appear who selected and revised the tales. (New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company, $1.50 net.)

YOUNG PEOPLE'S STORY OF MASSACHUSETTS, by HERSCHEL WILLIAMS, has a fine field, for Massachusetts in colonial days had an almost national character, and Mr. Williams gives a large part of his volume to that period. He does not neglect the revolution, however, and he allows to Boston of the last mid-century period its splendid pre-eminence as a center of culture and letters. It has been the distinction of New England to have her past worthily and reverently recorded for readers of the present, and Mr. Williams has done the youth of America a genuine service. E. F. Ward's finely conceived and executed illustrations in black and white are full of realism, yet sufficiently sympathetic with what is romantic in the text; and, indeed, of rare quality. (New York: Dodd, Mead & Co., $1.25 net.)

in a cage on the edge of a pond. The birds grew rapidly and soon became very tame. They ate from the hand of their owner and followed him about when they were liberated from their cage. In the autumn, they were given their freedom and followed the migration to the tropical shores of South America.

The following spring two pairs of these same birds returned, built their nests, and raised eight young. In the fall, there were a dozen snowy herons to go south in migration. Each succeeding year the number of birds was added to by natural increase, and other birds, also, were attracted to the refuge and made their home there. The number had grown so large by the end of the fifth year that it was found necessary to enlarge the pond from a couple of acres to thirty-five acres. The most of this pond is covered with a jungle of trees and shrubs which thrive in swamps, and which afford an ideal nesting place.

Mr. McIlhenny estimates that in recent years the pond has been occupied by fully 30,000 pairs of nesting and breeding herons, and of this number about 3000 were snowy herons. The nesting birds raised approximately 70,000 young while probably 15,000 old birds have been unable to nest because of lack of nesting places. From this, it will easily be seen what can be accomplished on Marsh Island with its 75,000 acres.

By her magnificent gift Mrs. Sage has greatly encouraged every one who is working in the behalf of birds. There are fifty-two other bird refuges in the United States, besides the lighthouse reservations, but Marsh Island is almost as large as all the other bird refuges put together. Several of these bird havens are protected by the government, but the large majority of them are supported by the Audubon societies throughout the country. While Mrs. Sage's gift is of immense value to the preservation of birds, the Audubon societies are still very much handicapped by lack of funds in their excellent work of establishing bird refuges. Contributions toward this end may be sent to the executive officer of the National Association of Audubon Societies, Mr. T. Gilbert Pearson, 1974 Broadway, New York City.

patio of our hotel, which was already gay with flowers, singing birds, and quaint domestic pets, was soon still more gay with many small maidens, each well chaperoned by her elders. Colored kerchiefs or tiny mantillas were pinned over their glossy black heads, and they "kissed the hands of their worships the señoras most gracious," as they spread out their laces for our inspection.

While the supply of lace is never very large in this group of lace villages, we were able to secure good examples of the most representative of the laces of the provinces. Prominent among them were the graceful mantilla (still the accepted head covering of the women of Spain of all classes in spite of the inroads of Paris modes) and the equally pleasing shoulder scarf, the mantone. There was also a varied assortment of neckwear made up in modish form from designs brought to them by the representatives of the lace houses, principally of Barcelona; for agents of these houses make their rounds through the countryside buying up lace and keeping the lace-workers in touch with the trend of fashion that they may adapt their work to meet demands.

The trimming laces, the edgings and insertions, were sold by the curious and antiquated measure of so many "palms," that is, by the width of the outstretched hand. "Eight palms" makes a somewhat fluctuating standard for a yard, as the widths of the venders' palms naturally differ not a little. Still, with charming designs priced so reasonably as sixty centimos the yard, and the more intricate and broader patterns offered at from only thirty to eighty of our American cents a yard, we could afford to overlook any inequality in the standard of "eight palms" among the little hands stretched out before our eyes in this lace bargaining.

In the afternoon we drove to the neighboring town of Malgrat, to secure some quadrados and rondellas for the ornamentation of household draperies and table linen. We were amazed to have two small sisters offer to make "their high mightinesses, the señoras," a lace dress apiece, their only stipulation being (the question of cost was relatively unimportant) that no time be set for the completion of the costumes, which made us suspect that their tasks might prove to be as unending as was that of Penelope of old.

And in the Catalan fashion of doing business, not only is the lace made in the time and at the sweet will of the lace-worker, but it is marketed in a dilettante manner most distracting. For instance, a young girl had solemnly promised to finish by a certain date an important order for a dealer in laces. He had just arrived to find his lace laid aside, unfinished. And why? Because the maiden, at the mature age of fourteen, had become engaged to a red-capped fisherman of a gay blue and green boat; consequently she was busily working on a lace program of her own for her coming trousseau, and most naturally she was obliged to inform the choleric gentleman blithely that in consequence his lace would have to wait and might even not be finished at all.

When our lace clue led us a few miles farther along this variegated shore through Canet de Mar and its sister village, Arenys de Mar, and into Masnou, not even Pepi could conjure up lace, for the entire population was rambling along their rambla, or boulevard, engaged in one of the many fête days of this sunny land. All the little niñas were racing along, scattering confetti and swirling endless spirals of tinted papers to the plaintive twanging of mandolins and guitars. Not a bolster was in sight.

Therefore we forsook lace, and chose, as our souvenir of this, our last lace town, one of its unique and famous fish dinners in a natural open-air palm garden with the waves of the Mediterranean, sapphire blue, lapping lazily almost at our feet.

The next day we reached Barcelona, and then, as if indeed dispelled by a fairy godmother's wand, our graceful little tartana vanished. Followed by many "adios, worshipful señoras," from Pedro and Pepi, we boarded—a prosaic railway train for France.

IN the death, last spring, of Howard Gardiner Cushing American art lost that which it could ill afford to lose, a decorative painter of rare ability and distinction. We have many artists who paint on walls, but an artist who possesses the decorative sense of Cushing is rare in any country, and Cushing's loss is all the more to be regretted as he was still a comparatively young man and had obviously not yet reached the full maturity of his art.

The development of Cushing's art was well illustrated in the exhibition of some sixty paintings, drawings, and sketches which was recently held at the Knoedler Galleries. The delicate, somewhat timid, early phase appeared in such works as the portrait of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney. There were drawings which bespoke the intensely French period through which most young artists pass, and finally there were such exquisitely decorative finished things as the full-length portrait of Mrs. Cushing, the wall decorations for the studio of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney (shown in photographs), and, latest of all, a group of thirty-nine sketches for decorations—unfortunately destined never to be finished—for the wall of a swimming-pool in the home of Mr. George Blumenthal.

Perhaps the most distinct quality in Cushing's work is its wonderful perfection of finish, its air of premeditation and of sure and unhesitating workmanship. Doubtless there are many instances in which this tendency has been carried too far, so that the resulting work seems cold, but in the best of Cushing's painting, the result is a finely decorative work, in which there is much of the aloofness, the sense of pervading stillness which is found in the finest oriental art

CUSHING THE ORIENTAL

Orientalism was strong in this artist. There is Japanese quality in such works as the full-length portrait of Mrs. Cushing which, of course, also owes much to Whistler's "Lady from the Land of Porcelain." In the decorations for the studio of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney at Westbury, Long Island, the orientalism is rather that of Persia and India. Through all his work it guides his feeling for decorative line and appears in the importance which he gives to the outline of his figures, and in the decorative flatness which he gives them. No decoration by Cushing ever performs the decoratively unspeakable feat of jumping off the wall,—a feat painfully usual in modern mural decoration.

THE CRAFT OF ART

In these days of painted emotions, of symphonic, abstract color, when our painters scorn realism and thorough draftsmanship and turn in horror from the benighted ways of those whom the world has been wont to consider great artists, it is always a joy to turn to these works of an artist who never forgot that, after all, one of the most fundamental requirements of art is that it shall please the eye. It is always with conscious pleasure that one looks at his exquisitely finished work, beautiful (Continued on page 168)

The orientalism which is so prominent a quality in Cushing's art finds, perhaps, its fullest expression in the decorations for the hall in the studio of Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney and subtly harmonious in color and delightful in its line and mass and in that perfection in the making which recalls the assertion of La Farge, "Back of every great work of art, there is a humble craftsman, who knows his craft and loves it."

Of action Cushing's paintings have not an atom. They are studies in perfect equilibrium, as static as an Indian Buddha. But they deviate from the paths of eastern art by an animation which is wholly western and sets at naught the mere physical inaction of the figures. That Persian maiden who so engagingly sits in the curving branches of a highly exotic tree will never be induced to vary by an inch the exquisite balance of her pose, but at any moment she may open her lips in bewildering confidences as to that strange land in which she lives and dreams.

Newport, Narragansett, Bar Harbor, and the mountain resorts, society arrives at this beautiful Virginia cure. For, quite aside from the fact that here time can be disposed of in a most entertaining fashion, the resort has another excellent excuse for being; one may come here to take the cure that gives that reserve of energy and good health which one needs to dance away during the coming winter.

A day at Hot Springs is a delightful combination of amusement and exercise. On rising one immediately takes the cure, which consists in drinking the waters and taking the bath. Like most cures, this isn't effectual all by itself; one must do something strenuous after it; and so, during the next few hours of the morning, one goes in for tennis, or golf, or walking, or for whatever exercise happens to appeal to the individual.

A SIESTA IN THE ITALIAN GARDEN

But in spite of all this activity, society feels the need of stimulating its appetite for luncheon. Hence, just before one o'clock, the guests meet at the Casino, or, as it is better known, the Club House, and take their morning cocktail or refreshment. After luncheon, an hour or so is pleasantly disposed of by dallying over coffee and the sun bath in the Italian garden. This is really the open court around which the Homestead Hotel is built, the only hotel at the Springs. The garden is laid out in terraces. The tables and comfortable chairs are placed on the upper terrace, and in the middle below are the fountains, the hedges, the flowers, and the marble benches which create the Italian atmosphere.

About three o'clock, society again hears the call of sport, and those who are enthusiastic riders start out for their canter over the hillsides. Some return to the Club House for tea, and others take their tea in one of the charming spots of the mountains, such as Valley View or Boon Cabin.

Between tea-time and dinner, there is a lull, but it doesn't mean that the guests are recuperating after their long day. Not at all; on the contrary, they are preparing for a long night. This may be a country resort, but before dinner everybody retires to make a very elaborate toilette. And then the smart thing to do is to invite one's friends to join one in a cocktail in the grill before going into dinner.

AS THE NIGHT WEARS ON

After dinner, strange to say, the halls and ball room of the hotel are deserted, although the music plays merrily on from nine o'clock until eleven thirty. No one is there, for the hotel presents an excellent feature film each night between nine and eleven. This finishes just in time for a couple of dances in the ball room; and after that the guests go to the Japanese room where there is an orchestra and where refreshments are served. About three times during the week, private dances are given at the Club House, then the guests dance until it really isn't worth while to go to bed.

The important question of what one wears at this autumn resort is easily answered. From early morning until dinner time nothing but sports clothes is in evidence. Of these, the smartest and the newest thing is a black or dark blue sweater. There is perhaps a practical reason for this, because when the sun has gone down it is very chilly, and the neutral black of the sweater does not detract from the bright colored top-coat of duvetyn trimmed with fur which is slipped over it.

The smartest skirts are those of white plaited charmeuse and those of black and white cretonne with striking designs in ravens and flowers against a white background. Jersey suits of various colors are also worn. The hat question is answered by small felt hats, really the most comfortable for sports and motor-ing. But just before dinner society changes from its cocoon of sports clothes into the butterfly-brilliant colorings of magnificent gowns and jewels. Trains have returned to evening gowns, and with them have come rich materials such as cloth of silver and vivid velvets banded with fur.

Among the visitors whose pictures appear on page 64, are Mrs. John Hall McCullough and Mrs. Craig Biddle. Miss Mimi Scott, daughter of Mrs. George S. Scott, and Miss Katharine Porter, daughter of Mrs. H. Hobart Porter, are being chaperoned by Mrs. Biddle. Miss Dorothy L. Norris, daughter of Mr. Alfred E. Norris, is a great devotee of dancing, and has herself originated several oriental dances.

THE CORRECT PERIOD OF MOURNING

Miss L. F. C.—Kindly let me know the correct period of mourning which should be observed by girls of twenty-one and sixteen years, for their mother. We have worn all black (or all white, in summer) for over a year. How shall we lighten our mourning, as regards both apparel and going out in society?

Ans.—The question of mourning is one of personal taste, and the modern idea is to lighten it as much as possible. We consider, therefore, that after a year of mourning it would be quite correct for you to wear embroidery or lace, and to begin going out, informally. Of course, you would not feel inclined to go to any big functions as long as you were wearing black; it would not be in good taste. There are, however, innumerable places where one can go, such as theatres and concerts, which help to give the essential variety and change of thought.

There would be no objection to a young girl's beginning to wear gray, and all white in the house is always charming.

A QUESTION OF WINDOWS

Miss L. E. G.—We are adding to our house a long narrow sun room with casement windows. Should the windows swing in or out? How should they be draped? I have seen short scalloped valances used at the tops; would they be appropriate?

Ans.—The casement windows should swing out, as the room is not very wide. Use no drapery, unless there is woodwork between the casements, in which case you could have straight curtains of muslin or thin silk which could be drawn across the windows at night. Japanese or Venetian shades which roll up seem to us more suitable for a sun room. Short scalloped valances would be neither useful nor ornamental.

Miss C. B. F.—My bedroom is furnished with mahogany in colonial style. The bed, however, is Empire. How shall I dress the bed? Are bolster rolls still used? Also what kind of window curtains shall I use? Could chintz hangings with valances be used and without lace curtains?

Ans.—If your bed is Empire, it may have a satin cover with Empire design. This cover should be drawn over the bolster roll, which is quite correct with this style of bed. However, if your furniture is colonial, it would seem to us better to use a knitted white cotton spread. Excellent reproductions of the colonial designs are now made by hand. You might also use an old-fashioned chintz on the bed and for curtains. You might have dainty muslin curtains under the chintz next the windows if you wish, but no lace curtains should be used, and the chintz curtains should have no valance.

OF INTERIOR DECORATION.

Mrs. W. E. H.—Can you advise me what carpets to use in my adjoining dining-room, living room, and small library, which are furnished in mahogany upholstered in mulberry velours and have mulberry velours hangings at their doorways? Also what window hangings would you suggest?

Ans.—For the three rooms with mulberry hangings and mulberry upholstered furniture, we would suggest that you use a plain tannish gray velvet carpet in each room. As you do not tell the color of the walls, we cannot be decided about the curtains, but we suggest that straight curtains of thin silk the same tone as the carpet be used directly next the windows. Over them should be hung curtains of heavy mulberry velours, which could be drawn at night.

Mrs. F. O. S.—Is the profession of interior decoration overcrowded, and what is the best way of entering the field? I am particularly interested in the furnishing of homes for people of moderate means.

Ans.—We are always very much interested in a woman's entering any career and think your plan to decorate and make attractive the homes of those of moderate means an excellent one.

We must frankly tell you, however, that the profession is overcrowded; yet there is always room for any one who really does good work. Now, if you have never studied at all, why do you not consider entering an art school and taking a course in interior decoration or dress designing? Then, as soon as possible, apprentice yourself, or work for a very small salary in some extremely reliable firm and thus get the practical experience; then you are ready to branch out for yourself. We feel sure that if you have talent and are sincere in your work, the road will be a very interesting one—we never say an easy one, because work means work.

THE NURSERY GOVERNESS

Miss E. McL.—Please tell me just what are the duties of a nursery governess.

Ans.—A nursery governess is a sort of glorified nurse; that is, she really takes the care of children that a mother would. Of course, where the establishment is large enough for an assistant who can do the so-called menial tasks, then the governess is not expected to do them; otherwise she takes complete care of the children and keeps their nursery in order, though she is not expected to do any cleaning, or assist in any way in the housework; the children are her care.

A Suggestion

Our Miss Lee will give you just that "personal assistance" in solving your gift problems, that you have been seeking.

Beauty has a Price! Pay it!!

It is such a small one when compared with this mighty possession.

The price is—only a little time and perseverance, supplemented by Elizabeth Arden's marvellously transforming Venetian Preparations.

Have an "Arden Complexion" which, when once seen, is never forgotten because of its exquisite living glow, which is the special hall-mark of this splendid Arden gift to womankind. The Arden way is the surest in producing a magical change in unlovely complexions, because it is more natural, healthful and scientific than any other in the world.

Look Many Years Younger than You Really Are!

YOU CAN—EASILY, by establishing those firm foundations upon which beauty shall rise. These are, a resilient condition of the muscular tissues underlying the skin; a healthy blood circulation throughout the facial capillaries; a virile elasticity of the outer cuticle.

BEGIN, by building up and firming these facial muscles—strapping them in the Arden manner, using Venetian Muscle Oil, Venetian Orange Skin Food and Venetian Ardena Skin Tonic, as instructed.

NEXT soften the texture and clear the skin of all blemishes by use of the Venetian Ardena Skin Tonic, Pore Cream, Velva Cream and Bleach Cream (write to Elizabeth Arden and she will tell you which is best for your needs).

THEN beautify the surface with Amoretta Cream, Cream Mystique (nose cream, to retain powder), or Lille Lotion and Venetian Flower Powder.

That Double Chin Should Disappear

AND IT WILL if you use the Venetian Special Astringent ($3) which firms and tightens the skin, adding to its elasticity; tones up flaccid muscular tissues thus smoothing out lines and wrinkles. Faces that are ageing, where the flesh is loose, leathery and shrunken, are immensely benefited by this exceptional astringent.

VENETIAN MUSCLE OIL

Feeds and fills out sunken tissues, softens mature lines and wrinkles about the mouth and eyes, firming and strengthening the entire face. Bottle, $1, $2, $4.

VENETIAN ORANGE SKIN FOOD

An unusually successful tissue builder. Imparts an enviable richness to the skin. Prevents the face from ageing, when dieting. Jar, $1, $1.75, $2.75.

VENETIAN ADONA CREAM

Rounds out the curves in neck, bust and shoulders. Jar, $1.25, $2, $3.

VENETIAN SPECIAL BLEACH CREAM

VENETIAN ARDENA SKIN TONIC

VENETIAN PORE CREAM

Recognized everywhere as the most effective means of reducing enlarged pores and refining the skin. Jar, $1.

VENETIAN VELVA CREAM

Preserves tender, delicate skin (will not fatten). Jar, 50c, $1, $2.

VENETIAN AMORETTA CREAM

VENETIAN LILLE LOTION

A medicinal liquid powder; whitens and perfects the skin; protects from wind and sun; counteracts flushing; also good for spots. $1, $2 (four tints), flesh, cream, Rachel and White.

VENETIAN CREME MYSTIQUE

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS

It is very important to give a governess time to herself and rest hours, as there is always a nervous strain in connection with taking care of children, if one does it properly, and no little child should be subjected to the uncertain temper that results from nervous fatigue. Of course she goes out with them, and she is expected to take a sincere and cheerful interest in their work and play.

It is a very beautiful work if people look upon it properly, as those who have charge of children are doing much toward building the future of the race. The trouble with the ordinary mother is that she gives too little thought to the character and disposition of those into whose hands she trusts her helpless little children.

There has been a very strong feeling in America lately on this subject, as life in hotels and parks is made hideous if one dares to watch the subtle cruelties practised upon children by careless and incompetent nurses. So we beg all who contemplate engaging anyone in such a capacity to make the most serious study of whether the person is suited to the work. It requires a woman possessed of great love and patience, in fact a very intelligent woman, for the task.

THE HOME WEDDING

Miss E. R. B.—Please tell me how to plan a small home wedding, which is to take place in the morning.

Ans.—For a small home wedding, the temporary chancel or altar should be arranged at the farthest point from the stairs, in order to make as long an aisle as possible, with palms as a background and a ribbon-covered rail, with flowers tied at the corners. A long cushion should be placed in front of the altar, for the bridal pair to kneel on. This cushion is easily made at home; it must be heavily wadded and might be covered with white satin. Ribbons might be tied to the staircase, and the ribbon bearers could then carry them to the altar, parting the guests to form an aisle right to the chancel rail. Sometimes iron standards, around which are twisted ribbons, are placed at intervals, forming a decided barrier. The clergyman walks up first and takes his place behind the rail, followed by the bridegroom walking with his best man, then come the bridesmaids and the bride.

For such a wedding one serves in the dining-room a breakfast which may be as elaborate as one's taste or purse dictates. Sandwiches, punch, chicken salad or, if one wishes a hot dish, creamed chicken, little cakes of all kinds, ice cream, bonbons, coffee, and wines would be appropriate.

Mrs. G. J. L.—Will you kindly tell me if it is correct always to shake hands when one is introduced?

Ans.—This question of shaking hands with the person to whom one is presented is a difficult one, as there are some people who feel they must shake hands with everyone; however, it is much more usual merely to bow. One should be ready to shake hands in case the other person puts out his hand, otherwise one bows. There is no set rule.

Mrs. L. M.—Please tell me how a five course luncheon should be served.

Ans.—The arrangement of the luncheon table is a matter of taste,—some people cover that table with a cloth, in which case there should be a large basket or bowl of flowers in the center, but no linen or lace centerpiece should be used. If a bare table is used, then there should be a centerpiece of lace or embroidered linen with doilies to match at each place. No candles are used, of course, in the daytime unless the dining-room is very dark. There should be a place plate for each guest and enough flat silver for four courses. For the fifth course, the silver may be placed with the plates. The napkin should be conventionally folded on the place plate.

It is not the fashion to crowd a table with small dishes, and so the salted nuts are passed with the bread and butter and olives, and the bonbons with the final course. Finger bowls are used, and if the luncheon is a formal one, coffee is served at its conclusion.

Mrs. G. T. H.—In what order should the flat silver be placed on the table for dinner, and how much silver should be placed there?

Ans.—Only sufficient flat silver for three or, at most, four courses is placed on the table; silver for the other courses is supplied by the servants as they place the plates. Consequently, it would be necessary to have on the table the soup spoon and two forks for the first two courses, with the corresponding knives. If oysters are served first, there should also be a small oyster fork. Bread and butter plates are never used at a dinner.

COSTUMES AND CARDS

Mrs. B. McC.—Is a blue velvet suit worn with an elaborate blouse appropriate to wear to a morning wedding? If one is invited to a wedding which one can not attend, should cards be sent?

Ans.—The blue velvet coat suit and waist would be perfectly correct. In fact, extremely smart New York women wear tailored dresses or suits to morning or afternoon weddings.

In answer to your second question, one may send cards to the one in whose name the invitation is issued (the parents or near relatives) to arrive on the day of the wedding. If one wishes to be particularly cordial, cards may be sent on that day to the bride and groom also.

FOR THE HOSTESSES

adapted for the needs of the diner. The lamb may be omitted, and a roasted duck, a haunch of venison, or some other bit of game may be substituted for the quail. In true British fashion a savory is included in the menu.

Escoffier also gives an admirable menu for a dinner for New Year's Eve, and as it is typical of the dinner in a fashionable hotel (where all the English world dines on New Year's if within reach of town) this may offer a suggestion to those who enjoy planning their own dinners:

Caviar de Sterlet
Clear Green Turtle Soup or Lobster Bisque
Supreme of English Sole
Roasted Chicken, Alexandra
Broiled Mushrooms
Roasted Black Duck, Currant Jelly
Endive and Grapefruit Salad
Frozen Tom and Jerry
Soufflés of Foie Gras
Frozen Plum Pudding with Cognac
Fruits
Coffee

For cooking the Christmas goose, nearly every family has its own favorite recipe, and the stuffing is done in a variety of ways. But if one is not wedded to any particular fashion of doing the bird, the method used by the Arlesiennes of Provence may be adopted.

A young fat goose is singed, cleaned, and trussed. A stuffing is made from four large parboiled onions, four ounces of bread crumbs moistened in sweet milk, three ounces of butter, a tablespoonful of parsley minced fine, a dash of grated nutmeg, and four ounces of chestnuts, which have been boiled, skinned, and chopped fine. After stuffing, the goose is put in a deep covered baking pan with one carrot, a few sprigs of celery, a little parsley and sweet marjoram, one onion, and one clove. It is braised in the tightly covered pan in its own steam for two hours. When tender and brown it is removed; the sauce is skimmed and reduced and mixed with one cupful of stewed and strained tomatoes to which the chopped giblets may be added if desired. It is then reheated and served with the goose, which, of course, should be accompanied by the traditional apple sauce. And, for a change, the apple sauce may be baked in an earthen crock in the oven, instead of made after the usual method. It will then have a clear red color and an incomparable flavor.

CHRISTMAS CAKES OF GERMANY

no celebration is considered complete unless there are plenty of "kuchen" or Christmas cakes. There are many recipes for these, and one best adapted to American tables is made in this fashion:

One half pound of butter is creamed, and one half pound of powdered sugar is beaten into it. The beaten yolks of six eggs, three quarters of a pound of flour, and a teaspoonful of vanilla are added. This is rolled out and formed into cakes in the shape of a letter S. or U. These cakes are covered with an icing of sugar and water, which has been boiled until it spins a thread, and then they are sprinkled over with some currants and chopped candied peel. Next they are baked in a hot oven.

ENGLISH CAKES

In England for the holiday season, a wonderful cake is made which will keep for two months; it is called Twelfth Night cake. Two pounds of butter are creamed with two pounds of powdered sugar, then spices are added—one entire nutmeg grated, one fourth of an ounce each of ground cinnamon, mace, ginger, and allspice. This is beaten ten minutes, then twenty eggs, with the whites and yolks beaten separately, are added slowly. Then the mixture is beaten for ten minutes more. Next are added two pounds of flour, four pounds of currants, one half pound of chopped almonds, one half pound each of chopped candied peel of lemon, orange, and citron, and a glass of brandy. The pans, which are lined with oiled paper, should be half full. It is baked for four and one half hours in a slow oven. This is a delicious cake, and it is served at Twelfth Night festivities in England.

There are as many recipes for plum pudding as one has fingers and toes. The Ingoldsby Christmas Pudding is a recipe favored in many households over-seas, and it is comparatively simple. One pound of raisins, one pound of currants, one pound each of sugar and flour, suet chopped fine, and stale bread crumbs are mixed. To this is added one fourth ounce each of candied peel, and allspice, the grated rind of a lemon, eight well-beaten eggs, and two glasses of brandy or rum. This makes two large puddings. Each is boiled in a bag for seven hours. It is served blazing with brandy and with a sprig of holly stuck in the top. A strong brandy or wine sauce is passed separately, and one must not forget that to be successful a Christmas pudding must have a hard sauce, as well. This is put on the top of the pudding and the brandy sauce is poured around it.

BEAUTY'S RE-BIRTH

To Whom May Fading Loveliness Turn For Restoration?

HERE are many women who, having lost their first flush of girlish beauty, feel keenly the need of someone to whom they can trust their complexions—someone who will cause their maturer beauty to unfold and develop into greater natural attraction—not to fade and decline, hastening the appearance of old age.

BUT TO WHOM MAY THEY GO?

There can be but one answer—Certainly not to old fashioned "Beauty Culturists," whose processes are nearly always destructive of delicate tissues. Nor may the mature woman turn to paints and unguents. Either practice is destructive. True, a lovely complexion may appear to bloom, but it is a false bloom, fading like a hot house flower when the "forced" development is ended. Woman is left with sagging cheeks—sallow, lifeless skin—deep seated wrinkles (caused by life-taking caustics) and a neck not softly firm with youthful outline, but loose and wrinkled.

MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN HAS REVOLUTIONIZED THE BEAUTY CULT

For it is Mme. Rubinstein, the European Specialiste, who has proved to Royalty abroad and later to the fashionable women of America, that the skin can only be beautiful and kept beautiful by wholesome, natural methods, stimulating skin health and preserving it. Her clientele has tested her methods and approved them because they have proved of lasting benefit—not only retaining loveliness, but causing it to be reborn—overcoming the scars left by thoughtless, irresponsible hands.

Mme. Rubinstein's treatments are individual treatments designed to overcome the individual failures of each woman's skin. Her preparations, too, are not cure-alls, but each one has a definite function to perform.

Consult then with her. For she is Beauty's rightful guardian—known the world over wherever lovely ladies gather. Write or call on her, stating frankly your complexion needs and you will have that confidence that only comes from knowing you have found the source from which true Beauty advice comes.

The function of each of the following preparations is clearly explained. These are for home treatments, and their use will be explained in greater detail when ordered.

VALAZE BEAUTIFYING SKIN FOOD

This wonderful preparation removes freckles, tan and sallowness; clears, softens and whitens the skin, and restores flawless beauty to the most neglected complexion, preserving its natural beauty to an advanced age. Valaze wards off lines and wrinkles and rejuvenates the skin tissues.

Valaze has been used for years by the best known women of aristocratic and royal circles abroad. Just as a good complexion is the foundation of real beauty, Valaze is the foundation of a good complexion. Price $1.00, $2.00 and $6.00 a jar.

VALAZE SKIN TONING LOTION

To obtain better and more rapid results this companion preparation to Valaze should be used with it. For a dry skin, the "Special" is used. Price, $2.00 and $4.00. For a greasy or a normal skin, the ordinary at $1.25, $2.25 and $3.00 a bottle.

FOR BLACKHEADS AND GREASY, COARSE SKIN

Valaze Blackhead and Open Pore Paste

Refines coarse skin texture, removes greasiness, blackheads, and reduces enlarged pores. Used in place of soap. Price, $1.00, $2.00 and $3.00.

VALAZE LIQUIDINE

Overcomes greasiness and "shine" of the skin, and undue flushing of nose and face. Gives a cool, fair and mat appearance to the complexion. Helps to overcome open pores and blackheads. Price, $1.50, $2.75 and $5.50 a bottle.

A copy of Madame Rubinstein's booklet, "Beauty in the Making," will be sent on receipt of 2c stamp to cover postage.

FOR THE HOSTESS

paste; when they are baked one should put in each tartlet half a peach (a fresh one if possible) the convex side uppermost. A little water is added to some castor sugar, and the mixture is boiled down. When this syrup is cold, a little is poured on each tartlet. Lastly a preserved cherry or a star or a disk cut out of angelica is put in the center of each tartlet.

When one is considering English dishes, the old English Christmas Bowl must not be forgotten. It is served on Christmas Eve. Nine small sponge cakes and one half pound of stale macaroons are broken up in a punch bowl. To this are added one pint of Malaga or raisin wine, two tablespoonfuls of sherry, two ounces of sugar, and a little nutmeg; and last are added one and one half pints of very thin, cold, boiled custard. It is stirred well together and served cold with a wreath of holly around the edge of the bowl.

THE ENGLISH WASSAIL BOWL

Different but most delectable is the famous English Wassail Bowl. To one pint of ale are added one half ounce of grated nutmeg, a pinch of cinnamon, and one half pound of brown sugar. It should be heated and stirred but not boiled. Two more pints of ale are added and then one half pint of old sherry or Malaga wine, the zest of a lemon rubbed on a piece of loaf sugar, and finally six cored and roasted apples. It must be served piping hot from the bowl, and each person takes an apple in his cup and pours the hot drink over it.

From an old collection of recipes are chosen the following, which are reproduced exactly.

Ye Pigeon Soup

Eight pigeons take, all pluck; two, the worst

Review, i. e. cut up & brown the pair.

In water that will fill a large tureen, Necks, gizzards, pinions, livers of the rest. Add & boil well & strain. Season the birds

But part dissected with your powerful spice

Mixed spice and salt,—English, you understand,

Not Attic; that perchance you lack,—and then

Truss them as if their little toes were cold, Legs into belly. Pick and wash and shred Parsley, young onions, spinach eke;—and grate

Bread, say a handful. In the frying pan A lump of butter put; and when it boils Throw in your bread, and mind you do it brown,

Put on the stock to boil, and add the birds,

Herbs, and fried bread; when the Doves are done,

Of course they may be dished.

Stewed Oysters

Friend am I, and not foe, & yet men beard me,
And boil my beard in my own juice with gravy,
Strain off my beard & put me in instead,

Thicken the mess with flour and ounce of butter,

Kill my ambrosial flavor with their ketchup

(White wine, anchovy, lemon, what you will)

Nutmeg & salt, & pepper, mace, and cream;

Simmer & serve me up on toasted sippets. They will not let me boil, but my blood boils

At thought of how, while they would paint the lily

Pepsine and piquant coolness both must perish.

Mother Eve's Pudding

If you want a good pudding to teach you I'm willing;

Take two penny'orth of eggs when twelve for a shilling;

And of the same fruit that Eve had once chosen

Six ounces of bread (let your maid eat the crust)

The crumbs must be grated as small as the dust;

Six ounces of currants from the stones you must sort,

Lest they break out your teeth and spoil all your sport;

Six ounces of sugar won't make it too sweet;

Some salt and some nutmeg will make it complete;

Three hours let it boil, without hurry or flutter,

And then serve it up, without sugar or butter.

(A sauce of whipped cream slightly flavored with curaçao is an improvement to the pudding.)

Almost as old as the preceding are the following recipes for plum pudding and mince pie. For the plum pudding, one should grate one pound of bread, and add one pound suet chopped fine, one and one half pounds of stoned raisins, one and one half pounds of currants, one half pound sugar, one and one quarter pounds of mixed candied peel, one quarter ounce powdered nutmeg, and a very little mace. This should be mixed with nine eggs and a wineglass of brandy.

For the mince pie one takes two pounds of lean beef cut from the under side of the back loin, and adds to it the same weight of beef suet, four and one half pounds of currants, one and one half pounds of stoned raisins, stoned and chopped, the juice and peel of three lemons, one pound powdered sugar, two large nutmegs, cloves and mace pounded, of each one quarter ounce, one quarter ounce of cinnamon, a good glass of elder wine and the same of raisin wine, two wineglassfuls of brandy, eighteen apples, and one quarter pound of candied lemon peel.

The apples and the candied peel must not be mixed with other ingredients to keep in a jar or the mince meat will go mouldy; they must be added to each portion when the pies are made with the candied peel cut in thin strips and laid across the mince meat in each pie. The meat should be cut hot from the fresh-roasted sirloin when it is half cooked.

MAKERS OF MUSIC

worth naming, and that what he had was too barbaric for musical manipulation. All this is absurd, as an open ear or a critical appreciation of Indian materials will prove. Mr. Farwell's fault was not that he had misjudged his materials, but that he looked for a genius whom America could not provide.

Yet his propaganda continues with mild momentum. Mr. Charles Wakefield Cadman has for some years been carrying on a gentle propaganda of his own, illustrating with his compositions the possibilities of using Indian tunes in civilized music. Recently, in New York, he gave one of his lecture-recitals for the first time. Associated with him as singer was a lady known publicly as the Princess Tsianina Redfeather, of the Creek tribe. Together they set forth the nature of primitive Indian music, as it has been recorded by phonograph from the lips of the Indians themselves. Thereafter certain of Mr. Cadman's "idealizations" were offered in evidence of its musical availability.

It is characteristic of Indian music to be off the pitch, or at least off the white man's pitch. So it may be of ethnological interest that the Princess Tsianina rarely coincided with the pale-face piano beside her. Certain it is that she did not idealize her pitch as Mr. Cadman did the tunes of her tribe; moreover, her production was faulty. But she helped to make the program picturesque, and picturesque, rather than beautiful, are Mr. Cadman's songs. Except for stray passages that seem almost accidental, he makes little attempt to preserve the flavor of the fine tunes he uses. He avails himself of the conventional technique which rules, though it does not grace, our vaudeville stage in its more sentimental moods. He has none of Mr. Farwell's groping enthusiasm. Even his much-liked song "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water" suffers in performance from blunders in the arrangement. Mr. Cadman has apparently tried hard to popularize his Indian melodies; he has succeeded only in cheapening them. Yet these lecture recitals of his are interesting and instructive. It is because Mr. Cadman bears an implied responsibility on his shoulders that criticism should be severe, for American music really needs the impulse which he is trying so amiably to bring to it. Composition in this country is mothered by dilettanteism and fathered by pedantry. The fresh influence must come in full blast from some direction, and it might well be from the Princess Tsianina's kinsfolk. And whenever such an influence is presented as a shallow and conventional thing, American music sighs away another day of needless sterility.

INTELLIGENCE VERSUS SOUL

Rudolph Ganz has always hurt his case because he is so extremely serious. In appearance he is like a well-groomed business man. With businesslike stride, he comes upon the stage and gets immediately to his work of playing the piano. In manner and appearance he is wholly free from the idiosyncrasies which are supposed to distinguish musical folk. His musical style has usually been described as dry or machine-like. At the worst this would mean that he misses the whole beauty of his music; but at its best, it means that he makes no concessions to a sentimental audience. One thing has been conceded him, ever since he first appeared in this country, more than ten years ago; he

© Mishkin

Efrem Zimbalist, the brilliant violinist, has already started another busy season of concert work. As all the world knows, Alma Gluck is his wife possesses a technique which is not surpassed by any pianist now before the public. His wrists are iron bars, his fingers, steel wires. Disdaining that vague thing called soul, he works wholly with his intelligence. His larger works are architectural monuments, never epic poems. Such a man can hardly command the love of the public, but he should command their respect.

It is a stern education to understand this man's work. All that intellectual power and technical ability can do with music he does, and it is surprising how nearly sufficient these two qualities are. In Debussy's preludes, for instance (Mr. Ganz played a whole set of them at a recent concert), there is little "interpretation" needed beyond a literal performance with a just proportion in the quality of the notes. These pieces, which are popularly supposed to be the momentary expression of passing moods, are almost wholly technical travaux de forces. This is true, to a surprising extent, of most good music. The great composers, with few exceptions, are first of all master workmen. Their art is an art of the hand, rather than an undulation of the soul, and they demand the same thorough craftsmanship of their performers. Only then does the emotion of their music speak freely.

A PIANIST'S CREED

Something like this seems to be the creed of Mr. Ganz. His performance of the Debussy preludes, as "mechanical" as his playing of Liszt's terrifying "Mazepa" study, is probably as good as any pianist in the world can give. With a just and literal reading of the "Faschingschwank" of Schumann (who, with all his lurid romanticism, was first of all the technician) he evoked an abundance of sprightly humor. Technical enthusiasm shows its unattractive side, perhaps, when Mr. Ganz puts on his program the Rachmaninoff Sonata in B flat minor, a work which is really not worth the trouble. But the classics are safe in his hands. Really to appreciate Mr. Ganz and Rudolph Ganz's ideals is to have a more sympathetic understanding of every true musician.

have resulted from the single vice, intolerance. This is a silly thesis, because it is not true. Intolerance, in fact, has always been a foe to progress; but much more damage has been done to humankind by each of the seven deadly sins. What Mr. Griffith has to say is not worth hearing.

"A DAUGHTER OF THE GODS"

"A Daughter of the Gods" is another highly-celebrated moving-picture. It tells a story that has something to do with a little white bird, a school of mermaids, a good fairy and an evil witch, a sultan and his harem, several hundred gnomes, and a lot of battles between armies of the Cross and the Crescent. What the story means it is impossible to tell; but the public likes it for the childish reason that it "is so full of a number of things."

The one good reason for going to see this moving-picture is that it contains Annette Kellermann. This young woman is divinely endowed with a very beautiful body; and it is always a joyous thing to see this lovely body swooping downward through the air and diving into water that ripples to receive it with delighted laughter. Beauty like this is genius, as Rossetti said; and it is always good to be reminded—even in a moving-picture—of the essence of the glory that was Greece.

MAUD ALLAN

Among the great reminders of that glory which have come to us in recent years, the best must be recorded to the credit of America; for it was an American artist—Isadora Duncan—who first recreated the Greek art of the dance and liberated the most quintessential of the arts from the trappings and the suits of those artifices which long had overlaid it in all the European countries. The ballet had become—in Italy and France—a mere acrobatic exercise of standing on the toes and twirling in a ruffle of fluffy drapery dependent from the hips until Miss Duncan, by going back to the Greeks, went back to nature, and made the art of dancing once again a living, pulsing sister to the still, cold art of sculpture.

Another American artist—Maud Allan—though not a pupil of Miss Duncan's, must be written down as one of her disciples. The technique of Miss Allan's dancing has improved remarkably in recent years; and now, at the height of her career, she excels her predecessor, if not in art, at least in the retention of a necessary youth and beauty. Miss Duncan can still dance with her mind; but the body of Miss Allan—by the accident of time—has become a finer medium for art.

The essence of all art is rhythm; for art is the expression of ideas in terms of truth and beauty, and the only ideas that are really worthy of expression are hints at the eternal harmony of the intricately rhythmic universe. Thus, for the sheer expression of the very soul of art; the dance comes first among the media that are available, with music second, and poetry a halting third. This was known to the Greeks, who knew all on earth we need to know; and all their art was built about the dance, as its central and essential point of focus.

Now that Miss Allan, after many years of practise, has become a great dancer, it has become a privilege to see her. Her interpretation, in terms of bodily movement, of the Peer Gynt suite of Edward Grieg, is, for instance, charmingly imagined and exquisitely true. To see her show, to eyes that wonder, the awakening of morning or the death of Ase, is to enjoy the thrill of looking sud-

Miss Allan's interpretation of "The Beautiful Blue Danube," like the previous interpretation by Miss Duncan is open to a logical exception. This composition by Johann Strauss—to state the simple fact a little crudely—is the best of all the dance-tunes of the world. But, to the present writer at least, it has always suggested a brilliant ball-room, all glittering with glass and gold, alive with many men in gorgeous uniforms twirling gaily round about with many women clad in swooping skirts. In the very air of this music there is something absolutely urban and indoors. The theme is not "the beautiful blue Danube"—which, in actuality, is nothing but a stream of brownish mud—it is, instead, imperial Vienna, artificial, brilliant, magnificent, and courtly. Miss Allan, to this music, represents a fable of a water-nymph awakened from some sylvan spring and streaming fluently about the stage as if in gladness at the greatness of a river. Her dance is lovely in itself; but it is not the dance inspired in the mind of Johann Strauss.

Miss Allan, in her present program, includes a dance-play in one act, entitled "Nair, the Slave." This pantomime, devised by Pietro Boldrini, with music by Enrico Belpacci, may be described as a sort of distant echo of the Russian ballet of "Scheherazade." In "Nair, the Slave," it is the fair female who kills the oriental prince, instead of the oriental prince who kills the lovely slave; but otherwise the two fables run very nearly parallel. The scenery and costumes, designed by Kemp Prosser of London, are colorful and beautiful.

Miss Allan was assisted in her performance by a symphony orchestra conducted by Ernest Bloch, a Swiss composer who has earned a considerable reputation on the other side of the Atlantic. This orchestra made music to the ear which was just as beautiful as that other music which Miss Allan made vivid to the eye. Yet perhaps the least forgettable of all the incidents of an unusually lovely afternoon was the eloquence of the arms of the dancer,—the way in which a spiritual impulse seemed to drift through fluent wrists to hands that laid a finger on the soul.

At the second of Miss Allan's matinees, only a handful of spectators were sprinkled through the auditorium; and, at that very moment, a mob of people were stepping on each other's toes in the effort to buy tickets, just around the corner, for "A Daughter of the Gods." Can it be that the public would rather see a moving-picture of a beautiful woman than see a beautiful woman actually making moving pictures all around the stage? The enigma is difficult to solve. But one experience resulted from a visit to Miss Allan's sparsely-attended matinee. When the writer stepped forth from the dream-world in which he had been entranced into the noisy world of Times Square, with its inconsiderable flutter, he felt suddenly ashamed of New York. And to be ashamed, now and then, of all that makes our daily lives unlovely and untrue is a salutary feeling.

"LE POILU"

It is characteristic of the French people that, in the very midst of their present tribulations, they should have produced in Paris such a pretty little story of war and its effects as "Le Poilu." In this dainty operetta of life in the trenches and in the tragic world that lives and waits behind the thin blue line of heroes, not a single word is said against the Bosches. Indeed—to quote a phrase remembered from the classic chronicle of Gibbon—the Barbarians of the North are never even mentioned. There are many patriotic numbers in this little operetta, but not a single hymn of hate. By what magic do the French so easily surpass us all in the perfect indication of good taste? If God Himself should walk through the garden that is France, the entire nation, from the loftiest artist to the humblest peasant, would "rise to their feet as He passes by,—gentlemen unafraid."

"Le Poilu" recounts a pretty story of a soldier in the trenches and his "marraine"—or god-mother for the period of war—who, although she has never seen him, writes letters to him and him alone, to remind him daily that there is something in the world to die for. This "poilu" has begun to write in terms of deep affection to his never-seen Suzanne; and the grandmother of this susceptible "jeune fille" has begun to be worried lest her ward should be allured into an injudicious marriage. So, when the soldier comes back to Paris on a brief furlough from the trenches, the old lady pretends to him that she herself is the Suzanne of the legendary letters. The youth, of course, is disappointed; but he comports himself in so courtly a manner toward the gray-haired lady who appears as his "marraine" that he not only wins her heart but also her consent to his marriage with her grand-daughter,—the actual Suzanne.

The "poilu" is required to return to the trenches on the morrow; and, in consequence, this romantically destined marriage is celebrated, of necessity, by proxy. After the ceremony, the bride by proxy wanders up to that section of the trenches where her husband is employed. Everybody falls in love with her at sight, from the humblest private to the colonel in command; but this fact cannot induce a relaxation of the regulation that wives are not allowed to visit their husbands when their husbands are on duty. The colonel, when apprised of all the facts, sentences the "poilu" to strict confinement in his quarters for a period of twenty-four hours; and, to make the punishment more terrible, he imprisons the intrusive wife, for the same period, in her husband's quarters.

This pretty little tale was told with charming naïveté by Maurice Hennequin and Pierre Veber, and it was acted in the same delightful spirit by a company imported to this country by Lucien Bonheur. The incidental music, by H. M. Jacquel, though a little thin, was satisfactory. But, unfortunately, the entire undertaking was debased by a deplorable occurrence. An American manager, who happened in at the rehearsals, decided that it was necessary to give the piece a "punch." By his advice, the "punch" was added. A company of cabaret performers was dragged up to the trenches to give the soldiers (and the public) an unexpected treat. These rowdies of Broadway proceeded to make the evening hideous long after the dainty little play itself had been concluded. The indescribably bad taste of this imposed appendage to what had been a dainty operetta made all the sensitive spectators feel ashamed of the very fact of their presence at such an exhibition. It was not so much the insult to the audience that seemed to matter so intolerably, nor even the insult to the authors and the actors; it was the insult to France. Much of the bad taste of our American managers may be forgiven on the ground that they cannot know what they have never known; but any American manager who—even quite unwittingly—insults the perfect taste of France in this period when all that is worth dying for and all that is worth living for is represented by the soul of France deserves to be consigned eternally to the ninth and deepest circle of damnation.

When the Ganz ideal is wholly lacking in a young artist, he may promptly be set down as a mediocrity. Beryl Rubinstein, a young American lad who recently made his first appearance in New York, proved his right to the noble title of pianist by playing a Bach prelude and fugue notably well. It is a good tradition which sets such a work at the beginning of a serious program. It is almost literally true that in Bach a good pianist can tell all he has to say; at least, the serious and critical listener can take his ease after the Bach piece and irresponsibly enjoy the program, knowing almost to a nicety what are the pianist's capacities in all types and schools of music. Young Mr. Rubinstein showed thorough reverence for the letter of his work, but he showed also a romantic tendency to soften and to sweeten, which colored all the later and more emotional part of his program. Mr. Rubinstein, as he stands now, is a well-equipped and sensitive young artist who seems especially happy in music of the romantic type.

HIGH IN THE RANKS OF LIEDER SINGERS

our concert stage. To begin with, his voice (it is called a baritone, but it sounds more like a tenor) is completely satisfying; there are few singers who produce their tones so well as he. Next, he has the advantage over most of his rivals in that his intelligence embraces much more than purely musical matters. Most singers are thoroughly professional in their attitude toward their art, and their lieder work always shows it. Finally, Mr. Werrenrath is continually roaming and experimenting. He has probably sung more new, as well as once forgotten songs, in his recitals than any other singer of his age on our concert stage. His program making is a delight. There is a thing known to the singer's profession as a "good program," which was devised by teachers to exhibit their pupils' powers, and which smells of academic dust. Mr. Werrenrath's programs are never "good." They range through four centuries, bringing together songs of a dozen lands and styles (all of which Mr. Werrenrath sings equally well), and setting off each group with all its individuality and charm. If only he could modify his habit of seeking his high notes on the tips of his toes he would be a very Prince Charming of the concert hall.

TWO garments that are favored by our most discriminating women — Isabelle and Clozabelle drawers, that are representative of our style, quality and serviceability.

"the garment of convenience" —with a perfect fitting waistline it fastens in front, full skirt, lace or embroidery trimmed. All sizes.

"the open drawer, perfected" —cut circular with no seams, a size for every waistline, it falls over the hips in graceful flares. Lace or embroidery trimmed.

can be made shapely — lovely*

Specialists say that in caring for the nails, your whole effort should be to keep the cuticle unbroken. When the cuticle is trimmed or cut away, the skin about the base of the nail becomes dry and ragged. It constantly roughs up, forms hangnails and makes the hands hideously unattractive.

It was to meet this need for a harmless cuticle remover that the Cutex formula was prepared.

See what one application will do

Send now for your midget Cutex manicure set and see what even one application does for your nails.

In the package you will find orange stick and cotton. Wrap a little cotton around the end of the stick and dip it into the Cutex bottle. Work the stick around the base of the nail gently, pushing back the cuticle. Wipe off the dead surplus skin. Rinse the hands in clear water. A little Cutex Nail White applied under the nails, removes any discoloration. Cutex Nail Polish in cake, paste or powder form, gives you just the quick waterproof finish you want.

Ask for the Cutex Manicure Specialties wherever high-class toilet articles are sold. Cutex, the Cuticle Remover comes in 50c and $1.00 bottles; introductory size, 25c; Cutex Nail White is only 25c, and Cutex Nail Polish in cake, paste or powder form is also 25c. If your favorite shop has not secured a stock, write direct.

"He rasted with my finger —the d - - - d little cuss!"

About 50 years ago an unknown young man wrote a story. In a flash it made him famous. The story was "The Luck of Roaring Camp." The author was Bret Harte; then an impressionable young man, fresh from the mining camps of California.

"The Luck of Roaring Camp" would have beaten a path to the door of any writer. It won with its common humanity as the Luck won the sin-blackened hearts of Roaring Camp. Roaring Camp was a rough mining town at the foot of the Sierras. A woman of the town dies in her travail and her soul climbs "that rugged road that led to the stars, and so passed out of Roaring Camp, its sin and shame forever." Her baby lives. The male contingent of the camp answers its new born wail. And little baby fingers clutch rough hearts with surprising results.

Maybe you have read this famous story; maybe you have finished it with tears in your eyes, and your heart pounding? Maybe you promised yourself sometime—some day—you would get the rest of Bret Harte's great stories, "M'liss," "The Out-cast of Poker Flat," "Salomy Jane's Kiss," and a host of others. Well, here you have your chance! The Metropolitan has just completed arrangements with the Houghton Mifflin Company of Boston, Bret Harte's authorized publishers, for a special 4-volume edition of Bret Harte's Selected Stories—the ones that stood the test of time. They are in four handsome green cloth bindings—40 wonderful short stories.

As you read each story you will lay down the volume and say, "Well, he can't possibly beat that one"—Presto! The next is even more thrilling, closing with a bang—leaving you laughing and sometimes blinking your eyes rather suspiciously.

Bret Harte's stories are of the Far West and the days of '49. They picture for Americans of to-day the courageous souls and times of a great nation in the making.

The lure of gold had attracted from all parts of the country the intrepid men and women that have always made the world's pioneers. They came from hamlet and town, good and bad, with the rough virtues and vices of a young people in a new country.

Bret Harte loved them—all of them. And if they had collided with a few man-made laws or dallied on the primrose path he gave them his affection the quicker. He loved them for their weaknesses because their sins brought them closer to the understanding of his great heart.

Learned critics, in later years, have solemnly praised Harte's stories and promised to them the immortality of genius. But before them and greater than their praise was a generation of Americans—the great army—of common folk—the people of Lincoln—who took Bret Harte to their own, who laughed and cried over his stories; whose hearts were touched with his tenderness, whose sympathy and love for men and women, good and bad, was broadened and deepened by the brain and heart of a great writer.

Here Is How You Can Get The Four Volumes, FREE

"Headaches—How Prevented"

What is more exhausting than headache? Yet—a headache is "only a symptom." It is in the conditions back of headaches—the conditions by which headaches are caused—that the real danger lies. High blood pressure, auto-intoxication, eye-strain and worse disorders cause headaches. To be rid of headaches, you must get at their cause. How to do this is explained in a new book, "Headaches and How to Prevent Them"—by Dr. W. H. Riley, a Neurologist who has had years of experience in treating all kinds of cases involving headaches. You may get relief by following the teachings of Dr. Riley's book. No drugs. Only natural means—diet, exercise, rest, and sleep. We send this book for your FREE examination. All you do is ask for it. (See the coupon.) If not satisfied with the book, return it at our expense. Your examination costs you not a penny. If you keep the book, you remit only $1.25. Not a large book, but—worth its weight in gold to the headache sufferer.

Practical—Yet Unique

"DIFUSOLITE"

The only graded form of electric lighting in existence. Placed on the library table, it will light up the entire room, toned from a uniform dim glow to a flow of brilliance—but never a glare. Or it will concentrate a restful diffused light on the table itself, and this too graded as you like it. The tones of light are easily controlled by a simple switch in the base of the lamp.

Difusolite represents a complete lighting system in one beautiful lamp. It may be attached to any portable lamp. When attached to Lynch lamps, (look for the trademark on the globe), you enjoy the unique combination of a wonderful light—and correctness of style and beauty in your lamp.

Moderately priced at most of the better lamp departments.

What to Wear—for Women

Do you know that clothes costing little money, and easily made, may be so graceful, so attractive, so exquisitely beautiful, that they will not "go out of style"? Mrs. Belle Armstrong Whitney—the great International Style Creator—tells you about these clothes in her new book "What to Wear." Mrs. Whitney is the woman whose word is law in the world of fashion. She has more say than any other woman living about what are to be "the styles." Her home is in Paris—the Fashion Headquarters of the world. Here, she is patron of the great dress artists and numbers among her friends and intimates many titled and famous people of fashion. Also, as "Fashion Counsel" to the most exclusive Fifth Avenue shops, Mrs. Whitney is "the power behind the throne" which makes her practically the "style dictator" of this country. In her new book is information which will astonish you with its simplicity, its usefulness and good sense. Study of this book will enable you to dress well at all times, on all occasions, and at very low cost for—Mrs. Whitney knows women—and dress and—she is a great artist. Following her teachings will help you to do more with every dollar you have to spend on dress. Send for this book today. The price is only $2. Upon receipt of it we will promptly send you the book postage full prepaid. Keep it 5 days. Read it thoroughly. Then—if not entirely satisfied, return the book and we will promptly refund every penny of your money. Thus, you take no risk. Order this book today, be better dressed and—save money. Over 200 pages. Fully illustrated. Luxurious binding. A wonderful gift for any woman and—worth its weight in gold to those who must dress well with small means. Order from—

Vogue will take pleasure in helping you do your Christmas shopping

Make Your Christmas List from This Issue of Vogue. It is a treasury of Christmas gifts, every one of them actually purchasable at a stated price. For months, Vogue's editors have ransacked the smartest shops, studios and ateliers for these gifts of distinction. They represent original ideas, faultless workmanship and the best shopping values. Properly used, this issue of Vogue will enable you—with the least work and the greatest satisfaction—to give everyone on your list a really distinctive and unusual gift.

Follow the Model Letter on Page 88. Vogue's Shopping Service is already busy with the Christmas orders. Thousands will come in during the next three weeks. Every order will have individual attention. To prevent confusion or misunderstanding, you are urged to follow Vogue's Model Letter (see page 88) in making out your order.

Conform to Vogue's Shopping Rules. Out of years of experience, Vogue has formulated the shopping rules given below. Read them carefully; follow them exactly; and your Christmas packages will reach you promptly. Remember, Vogue charges you nothing for its services.

For Your Convenience and Ours

1. What Vogue will buy. Vogue will buy for you, without charge for its services, any article editorially mentioned in Vogue. When ordering anything that has appeared in Vogue, give date of the issue and number of the page.

2. How to order. Simply write to the Shopping Service, stating what you want (see model letter) and enclosing check or money order to pay for the desired articles. There are no charge accounts in the Shopping Service. Remittances in amounts less than $1 may be made by postage stamps.

3. Second Choice. It is not necessary to state your second choice, but it is desirable. Your first choice will always be purchased for you, except in cases where special popularity has exhausted early the stock of some particular thing. In such a case possible disappointment and delay may be avoided if Vogue has your second choice at hand.

4. No charge accounts. Articles purchased through Vogue cannot be charged to your personal account in the shop from which they are bought. Nor can articles be sent C. O. D. by the shop.

5. No articles on approval. During the busy Christmas shopping season, articles cannot be sent on approval. This is a rule of the shops against which Vogue can make no exception.

6. No samples. Vogue cannot promise to send samples of materials in December.

7. Deliveries. All articles will be sent express collect unless otherwise requested. Small articles, however, can be mailed; when ordering them enclose approximate postage and the remainder, if any, will be returned to you.

8. Letters of inquiry should enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for our reply. We will do our utmost but cannot guarantee during the month before Christmas to answer all questions. Please write your letter and signature very distinctly.

9. Advertised articles. If more convenient for you the Shopping Service will be glad to buy for you any articles shown in the advertising pages, but in buying such articles it generally saves time to write direct to the shop.

Order Early to Insure Satisfaction. Even in the greatest metropolitan shops, where gifts are offered by the tens of thousands, the most favored things sell out days or even weeks before Christmas. Therefore, when you know well in advance what you want, order it immediately. Not only will you have the certainty of securing just what you want, but you assure early delivery. This number of Vogue is in your hands a full month before Christmas. It gives you ample time to do everything, provided you begin at once.

When your friends receive gifts purchased through Vogue they receive gifts from the best shops in the world

Paris sends us the Beauty Bang

The French widow's chapeau revealing as it does this fascinating fringe of hair, is doubtless responsible for its vogue. It covers frowns and wrinkles, complements the contour of the face and is wonderfully alluring. It is an attractive convenience for the motor hat, and—worn in the boudoir cap,—the Beauty Bang gives a quaint charm and conceals the belated coiffure.

The Beauty Bang
Price, $2.00

We shape the Beauty Bang to suit each individual style, constructing it so that where a thin bang is desirable, it divides and becomes a part of the upper coiffure—adding grace and softness.

All hair-needs looked after in our parlors. Grey and faded hair restored to its original color. Transformations, braids, waves, curls, etc., supplied with becoming correctness. Scalp treatment given—also advised by mail. Tell us your hair needs. All information strictly confidential.

The Gift Fairy's Christmas Hamper

The Christmas Fairy's here again and we know what he brings—a fat and sturdy hamper just a-bursting full of things; a basket like the grown-ups have, with padlock and a key, and every little gift inside wrapped up so none can see.

Just tell us 'bout that little girl or all about that boy and we'll pick out the presents so they'll give the most-est joy. One week before the Twenty-Fifth we send ahead the key, just saying "something's coming," and to guard it carefully.

Then when the Hamper comes along, just wait and watch the fun—it's really Christmas! Don't you wish the Fairy'd bring you one?

"TOYS from FOREIGN TOYLANDS"—the unique sort not shown elsewhere. Illustrated Catalog of Holiday Playthings on request.

"WHO LONGER demurs that women come and go unattended, simulate men's hats and coats so far as they can without disillusioning the beholder, carry latch-keys, have their separate clubs and separate bank-accounts, read everything under the sun, and discuss almost everything with nearly everybody?"

"IT HAS long been axiomatic that the American wife felicitates herself on her superiority to her husband, though she refrains from telling him so," says Robert Grant in the Christmas Scribner's in the course of a vastly entertaining comparison of "Feminism in Fiction and Real Life."

Talking of the blessings of electricity, cold storage, and ready-made foods, he says: "Even the kitchen of the workingman's wife is a paradise compared to what it used to be; and it is fortunate that the 'movies' should have been discovered just at the moment when she has leisure enough to enjoy them."

You will want to discuss this article with your friends and, for yourself, you will want the nine excellent short stories which make this number so unusually rich in interest.

Are you seeing Scribner's regularly? In this day of mediocre fiction you have to choose your stories carefully, don't you? Better to subscribe to Scribner's and be sure. By the year, $3. Four months, for acquaintance's sake, $1.

"Hello Huck"

RECALL that golden day when you first read "Huck Finn"? How your mother said, "For goodness sake, stop laughing aloud over that book. You sound so silly." But you couldn't stop laughing.

Today when you read "Huckleberry Finn" you will not laugh so much. You will chuckle often, but you will also want to weep. The deep humanity of it—the pathos, that you never saw, as a boy, will appeal to you now. You were too busy laughing to notice the limpid purity of the master's style.

MARK TWAIN

When Mark Twain first wrote "Huckleberry Finn" this land was swept with a gale of laughter. When he wrote "The Innocents Abroad" even Europe laughed at it itself.

But one day there appeared a new book from his pen, so spiritual, so true, so lofty, that those who did not know him well were amazed. "Joan of Arc" was the work of a poet—a historian—a seer. Mark Twain was all of these. His was not the light laughter of a moment's fun, but the whimsical humor that made the tragedy of life more bearable.

The Price Goes Up

25 VOLUMES

Novels—Stories—Humor—Essays—Travels—History

This is Mark Twain's own set. This is the set he wanted in the home of each of those who love him. Because he asked it, Harpers have worked to make a perfect set at a reduced price.

Before the war we had a contract price for paper, so we could sell this set of Mark Twain at a reduced price.

A Real American

Mark Twain was a steamboat pilot. He was a searcher for gold in the far west. He was a printer. He worked bitterly hard. All this without a glimmer of the great destiny that lay before him.

Then, with the opening of the great wide West, his genius blossomed.

His fame spread through the nation. It flew to the ends of the earth, until his work was translated into strange tongues. From then on, the path of fame lay straight to the high places. At the height of his fame he lost all his money. He was heavily in debt, but, though 60 years old, he started afresh, and paid every cent. It was the last heroic touch that drew him close to the hearts of his countrymen.

The world has asked is there an American literature? Mark Twain is the answer. He is the heart, the spirit of America. From his poor and struggling boyhood to his glorious splendid old age, he remained as simple, as democratic as the plainest of our forefathers.

He was, of all Americans, the most American of all. Free in soul, and dreaming of high things—brave in the face of trouble—and always ready to laugh. That was Mark Twain.

Send the Coupon Without Money

The last of the edition is in sight. The price of paper has gone up. There can be no more Mark Twain at the present price.

VANITY FAIR

Your Christmas Dog!*

A leather merchant from the Argentine bought a St. Bernard puppy in New York. The dog is now safely in Buenos Aires—Distance 8045 miles.

A Captain in the Army ordered a young Bull terrier to take with him to his army post in Hayti—Distance 1800 miles.

Up in Montreal there is a young Boston terrier, a son of a famous American champion. A bank president there bought him by wire in New York. Distance 350 miles.

An English lady, long resident in China, bought a Chow puppy in America. The dog is now back in his ancestral kingdom,—after a trip of 10,000 miles or so.

These dogs, bought through The Dog Mart of Vanity Fair, have gone greater distances than you may want to have one sent. In every instance they have arrived in good condition and without accident.

Whether you live in Maine or California, in New York or in Florida, you can have exactly the same confidence in The Dog Mart as the Vanity Fair readers in the Argentine, Hayti, Montreal and China have had.

Theoretically, at least, every gift is welcome! But some, like flowers, soon fade, and others, like cigars, are soon forgotten. One gift—the gift of a fine dog—is always new, always alive, a daily source of companionship, amusement and protection!

But good dogs are really hard to find! Unless you know where to look for them your chances of a happy ending are really remote! Vanity Fair, with rather commendable foresight, has done the looking for you. Now, read slowly and carefully, for

A good dog costs roughly from $35 to $1000. You can seldom buy a dog worthy of the name—for less than $25.

When you do, you are taking a great chance, for the feeding and care of a puppy from birth accounts for the greater part of $25—to say nothing of the worth of the dog itself.

The best dog investment you can make is good breeding. A $100 puppy ought to triple in value at maturity.

An Airedale puppy may be had from $25 up—a good one for $50 to $75. Scottish terriers, Irish terriers, Bull terriers and Fox terriers show about the same range in price.

Pom, Peke, Griffon Puppies run from $50 to $125. German Shepherd (Police) or Chow puppies cost about $100 or $125—grown dogs cost more, according to their quality, breeding and records as prize winners.

No matter what kind of a dog you want, send us as full particulars as possible. Vanity Fair will be glad to help you to make your Christmas present really welcome, to advise you in regard to the best and most reliable kennels.

GO TO your nearest newsman! Exchange a quarter for the Christmas number of Vanity Fair.

Turn to that most distinctive department—The Dog Mart—twelve pages large.

Here the best breeders of America tell about their dogs. Only kennels known to Vanity Fair's expert for the excellence of their stock and the reliability of their dealings are represented in The Dog Mart. You will find many breeds—from the smallest of toys to the largest and lordliest of Great Danes and St. Bernards.

Read these twelve interesting pages carefully. Select from them the dog you want to give or get for Christmas. But, if you cannot locate the dog you want, then Vanity Fair is your solace in sorrow. Write to The Dog Mart, tell the kind of a dog you want, how much you want to pay and as many particulars as possible. A letter from Vanity Fair's dog expert will come to you by return mail.

So, beg, buy, borrow or steal a copy of the Christmas Vanity Fair. You can't help but get the dog you want to give or get for Christmas. Don't delay, don't linger, don't wait!

With this method foreign language study becomes a pleasant mental diversion. All the old-time drudgery of memorizing unnecessary rules, is eliminated. You learn in the natural way—the way you learned your own tongue—hearing the living voice pronounce each word and phrase. Anyone can learn a foreign language who hears it spoken often enough, and by this method you can hear it as often as you desire.

A knowledge of a foreign language broadens the intellect, widens your acquaintance commercially and socially, perfects your conversational powers, and adds enjoyment to your reading and travel. Perhaps you need only brush up on the language you studied at school or college to make it of practical use.

Physical Culture for the Face

will make you look younger and more beautiful than all the external treatments you might use for a lifetime. No massage, electricity, vibration, astrin-gents, plasters, straps, filling or surgery—nothing artificial—Just Nature's Way.

Results come soon and are permanent. My system makes muddy, sallow skins clear, and the complexion as fresh as in girlhood; firms the flesh and never fails to lift drooping and sagging facial muscles, removing the wrinkles they cause. The too thin face and neck are rounded out and hollows filled in. No one too old or too young to benefit.

My system makes double chins disappear quickly, and leaves the flesh firm after the superfluous fat is worked away. No matter how tired, five minutes of my facial Exercises will freshen your complexion and give it a most exquisite coloring for a whole evening.

Write today for my new FREE booklet, Facial Beauty Culture.

If you will tell me what improvements you would like, I can advise you more helpfully. Your letter will be held in strictest confidence.

GROWING OLD GRACEFULLY

The key to health in old age is the prevention of bowel disorder.

Constipation, which becomes more and more chronic with advancing years, frequently makes the burden of old age seem heavy indeed. Yet in most cases constipation can be entirely prevented by a little care in the matter of diet and by supplying in Nujol an efficient substitute for the mucus which exhausted nature no longer provides.

Nujol is not a bowel stimulant. It acts as an internal lubricant, softening the contents of the intestines and so promoting normal evacuations.

Your druggist has Nujol. Avoid substitutes. Nujol is sold only in pint bottles bearing the Nujol trademark.

"How Late Can I Order Gifts?"

To save you possible disappointment in securing exactly the gifts you want, and the equal disappointment of having the gifts you do select arrive after Christmas, Vogue has consulted with the Post Office and Express authorities, and prepared for your convenience the Gift Time-Table below.

Although Vogue's Shopping Service is prompt and express trains are many, the number of miles between your home and Fifth Avenue shops is inalterable, and you must order early enough to make sure of before-Christmas delivery. The charm of a gift lies in its surprise, and the gift that comes trailing in after Christmas is as flat as yesterday's champagne. If you study this Gift Time-Table, and order in accordance with it, there will be no hitch in your Christmas shopping.

Moreover, the sooner you order, the wider your choice. Nobody can predict the unaccountable runs of popularity on certain articles, and although the shops do their best to keep a stock of the things shown in Vogue up to the very last minute, some of the late shoppers are almost sure to be disappointed.

From this Vogue which you are now reading, you can do much of your Christmas buying at once. From the next Vogue—the Holiday Number, on sale December 5th—you can finish it all in ample time for Christmas, provided you order in accordance with the Gifts Time-Table on this page. Will you not meet us half way: first, by securing your copy of the Holiday Number of Vogue as soon it appears; and, second, by ordering your gifts with the least possible delay?

The gift that adds to the good times at the moment; that indoors and out gives zest to the merry making and then—preserves the happy picture story of all that goes to make the day a merry one.

The Kodak catalogue, free at your dealer's, or by mail, tells in detail about the various Kodak and Brownie cameras — from $1.25 upward. Photography is really very simple and inexpensive. Kodak has made it so.
